

UNIVERSAL LIBRARY

OU_172044

UNIVERSAL
LIBRARY

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE

EDITED FOR THE SYNDICS OF THE
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

BY

SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-COUCH
AND JOHN DOVER WILSON

THE
TWO GENTLEMEN
OF VERONA

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

C F CLAY, MANAGER

LONDON FETTER LANE, E C 4

BOMBAY }
CALCUTTA } MACMILLAN AND CO, LTD
MADRAS }

TORONTO : THE MACMILLAN CO OF CANADA, LTD.

TOKYO · MARUZEN-KABUSHIKI-KAISHA

COPYRIGHTED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA BY THE MACMILLAN CO.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

Edward Alleyn

THE
TWO GENTLEMEN
OF VERONA

CAMBRIDGE
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

1921

CONTENTS

PORTRAIT OF EDWARD ALLEYN	FRONTISPIECE
INTRODUCTION	PAGE VII
TO THE READER	XX
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA	I
THE CORY FOR THE TEXT OF 1623	77
NOTES	83
THE STAGE-HISTORY	105
GLOSSARY	107

THE FRONTISPIECE IS A REPRODUCTION OF THE PAINTING AT DULWICH COLLEGE ALLEYN, THE MOST FAMOUS OF ELIZABETHAN TRAGIC PLAYERS, WAS WITH SHAKESPEARE'S COMPANY IN 1592-4 AND IS LIKELY, THEREFORE, TO HAVE ACTED IN HIS EARLY DRAMAS

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

So far as we know, this play first achieved print in the Folio of 1623, where it follows The Tempest. But it stands first on the list of six comedies mentioned by Meres in 1598; and all internal tests, of craftsmanship and versification, point to a date considerably earlier yet. It is indeed, by general consent, a youthful production: and we may pretty safely place it somewhere near the threshold of Shakespeare's dramatic career.

At all events, in the long interval before the stage copy reached the Folio printers the theatrical people had played some strange tricks upon it. Shakespeare's original carelessness may perhaps have been to blame for mixing up Verona and Padua with Milan¹, as for giving Verona a roadstead and starting Valentine for Milan—as easily as one might start him from Oxford to Cambridge—by sea. Shakespeare, first and last, was sadly addicted to finishing off a play in a hurry. But the final scene of the Two Gentlemen is vitiated (as we hope to show) by a flaw too unnatural to be charged upon Shakespeare.

Reserving this, and putting the vexation of it out of our thought for the moment, we can enjoy the play as a light and jocund Italianate comedy—Italianate, that is, in the Elizabethan fashion, when it chose to take its Italy gaily. For Italy was the traditional, almost conventional, scene of Elizabethan drama, and could be taken either way—with vice and murder, Borgias, cups, daggers, tortures and intellectual refinements of depravity (with its 'black-guard quality air' to use Carlyle's phrase of King John), or with masks, mandolins and pretty amorous intrigue. Verona serves as background for Julia and for

¹ See notes on 2. 5. 1, 3. 1. 81; 5. 4. 130.

VIII THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

Juliet; Venice for Shylock and for Othello as handily as for Gratiano, and Launce and Launcelot Gobbo are brothers and might inhabit either. In the original version of that most English of comedies, Every Man in his Humour, Jonson laid the scene in Florence and gave his characters Italian names. Few will deny that by transferring the scene to London and turning his eccentrics into English men and women he made—by this process alone—a vastly better play, that in his native-grown Comedy of Humours this increase of realism increases his vivacity and verisimilitude. The audience approved, and the successors and congeners of Every Man in his Humour—Epicoene, The Alchemist, Bartholomew's Fair—were duly located in or near London.

Our Scene is London, 'cause we would make knowne
No countries mirth is better then our owne

(Prologue to The Alchemist, 1610)

The apology, however, hints the innovation. In 1598 Jonson would stage his British comedy in Florence as unhesitatingly as, ten years or so later, Webster staged his Italianate White Devil in Rome or Padua, or—shall we say?—with no more trouble of artistic conscience than Shakespeare felt in dodging the centuries and dragging the right Renaissance scoundrel Iachimo into a supposed early-British Tragedie of Cymbeline. 'Somewhere in Italy' was in fact the spot where an Elizabethan playwright and his audience started upon agreed terms. Apart from the tradition and the romance of it, this convention of Italy conveniently accommodated the players, under a wide range of magnificent titles, with a still wider wardrobe of magnificent and miscellaneous costumes.

Guess-work suggests that in The Two Gentlemen of Verona Shakespeare recast an old lost play The History of Felix and Philomena, entered in the Revels Accounts, 1584-5, as having been acted by the Queen's company at Greenwich 'on the sondaie next after neweyeaes daie at night': because the Proteus and Julia story comes straight out of an episodic tale in a Spanish romance, Diana Enamorada, written by a Portuguese, Jorge de Montemeyor, and translated by Bartholomew Yonge; and because the names in the title of this lost play repeat (with allowance made for a copyist's error) the names of the hero, 'Felix,' and the heroine, 'Felismena,' of Montemeyor's story. Felix woos Felismena by letter, with her maid as intermediary; he travels to Court and is pursued by Felismena in male attire, she lodges at an inn, overhears him serenading another mistress, takes service with him as a page—the recognition being effected later after a scene of combat in a forest. There are other points of resemblance, but these may suffice.

We shall get more instruction perhaps—as we shall certainly get more amusement—from looking forward than from casting back. For The Two Gentlemen of Verona holds a store of stage-effects which Shakespeare kept henceforth in his locker, to try them and to improve on them again and again. For a few examples—

(1) It would seem that he was already acquainted with George Brooke's poem of Romeus and Juliet (1562): for our play anticipates Romeo and Juliet (based upon that poem) in a number of particulars—the place, Verona, Silvia's window and balcony, most like Juliet's, the rope-ladder which Valentine has patented ahead of Romeo. Juliet makes assignation at 'Friar Laurence' cell', but Silvia has been beforehand with her

at Friar Patrick's cell
Where I intend holy confession—

and (as Fluellen might say) there is a Friar Laurence in both. Valentine's burden of despair on the word 'banished' preludes Romeo's descant¹:

There is no world without Verona walls
But purgatory, torture, hell itself

¹ v. note on 3. 1. 170-87.

x THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

Hence-banishéd is banished from the world,
And world's exile is death. then banishéd
Is death mis-termed...

—and so on, through a score of suggestions and echoes.

(2) But when we come to The Merchant of Venice these echoes multiply. We have already noted the brotherly likeness between Launce and Launcelot Gobbo. It is a trifle in comparison with the scenes in which Julia and Portia discuss choice of suitors with their maids; a trifle when we consider the number of heroines Shakespeare set travelling after Julia in man's attire: Rosalind, Viola, Imogen and every single woman in The Merchant of Venice—Portia, Jessica, Nerissa. On a minor point, we may compare the use of the ring-token to bring about 'recognition' in these two plays.

The mission of the disguised Julia to Silvia is repeated and beautifully improved in Twelfth Night. The outlaw business is worked better and better in successive plays. Speed's discourse on the marks of a lover is father of a numerous progeny. ..But we have said enough, and need not extend the list

We may, then (still bating the last scene), read in The Two Gentlemen something more than a graceful story charmingly told. It is that. but it also fixes and holds in arrest for us a fleet youthful and peculiarly fascinating phase or moment in the efflorescence of Shakespeare's art:

For ever warm and still to be enjoyed,
For ever panting and for ever young!

and our pleasure in studying it, though we have begun with dramatic 'effects,' by no means ends with them.

The diction is melodious, on the whole too mellifluous. 'Fine writing' still engages him, and a butterfly 'conceit' still allures him to pursue and over-run it. Lucetta has already (i. 2. 30) announced of love that

Fire that's closest kept burns most of all—and Julia elaborates this later (2. 7. 24) into

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns.
 The current that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopped, impatiently doth rage:
 But when his fair course is not hinderéd
 He makes sweet music with th'enamelled stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtaketh in his pilgrimage,
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wide ocean .

We all remember the passage for its imagery, its cadence, and its delicately chosen words. But it is boyish, inexperienced: it keeps the speaker dallying luxuriously with an image while the dramatic moment slips away; the passion requisite for fusing the two having had time to cool. It is pretty: but it has not the masterly touch of

And unregarded age in corners thrown or

O liméd soul, that struggling to be free
 Art more engaged! Help, angels! make assay...

or

The lamentable change is from the best;
 The worst returns to laughter

For promise of that, to find it in The Two Gentlemen, we must seek among chance lines:

Poor wounded name my bosom, as a bed,
 Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly healed.
 Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?
 Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand
 Is perjured to the bosom?

But the promise is there.

There is notable promise, too, in the characters. The Two Gentlemen would seem to be the earliest play in which Shakespeare turned from 'construction'—that idol of artistic beginners—to weld character into his plot. Again as in The Comedy of Errors he gives us two gentlemen with a servant apiece · but this time he discriminates master from master, servant from servant, to individualise them. To be sure, because he has to follow a ready-made story, we find him experimenting most happily upon the characters—upon Launce, for example—who give him most liberty because they are least tied to obey the exigencies of the intrigue. Proteus has to play the almost incredibly false friend, in order to work the story, and to make it plausible, even to himself, must spend most of his time and ours upon cold sophistries. Valentine and Silvia have been well called ‘two silver-point studies,’ ‘somewhat high-fantastical, but gentleman and lady to the core.’ The plot allows them high moments of generosity—nay, even works upon these—yet in its motion treats the pair as dupes, almost as dummies. For example, it is not by proof or by prowess that Valentine becomes captain of the outlaws, but simply because they like his looks and accept his bare word for his linguistic attainments.

Nevertheless, and throughout the play, we feel that Shakespeare, though—with the exceptions of Julia and Launce—he cannot, without making them dull, keep any of his dramatis personae steadily consistent, is always keeping them lively and always bringing them to the edge, at least, of startling us by some individuality. We feel, as we read, that these people are impatient of the convention within which they are held: that any one of them, at any moment, may break out and do something original; and this holds us in an atmosphere of expectancy which, if not the same as reality, curiously resembles it. Yet while individualising these people, he is learning to give them—the women especially—that catholic kinship which communicates to us, as we wander in Shakespeare’s great portrait gallery, a delightful sense of intimacy, of recognition. They belong to a family—our family—the Human Family. For this trick of feature (we have already compared Julia and Lucetta with Portia and Nerissa, discussing suitors) let us take Silvia's hesitancy in handing back Valentine's letter.

Silvia Yes, yes the lines are very quaintly writ,
But—since unwillingly—take them again
Nay, take them

Valentine Madam, they are for you

Silvia Ay, ay you writ them, sir, at my request,
But I will none of them they are for you.
I would have had them writ more movingly

[he takes the letter]

Valentine Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

Silvia And when it's writ for my sake read it over,
And, if it please you, so if not why, so.

Valentine If it please me, madam, what then?

Silvia. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour,
And so good-morrow, servant.

and let us, bearing it in mind, cast forward to Beatrice's feminine hesitancy in Much Ado about Nothing:

Benedick I do love nothing in the world so well as you—
is not that strange?

Beatrice As strange as the thing I know not It were as possible for me to say I loved nothing so well as you, but believe me not, and yet I lie not, I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing, I am sorry for my cousin¹

We come now to the final scene, and, in particular, to the passage which has offended so many critics of sensibility: the lines in which Valentine 'empties'—as the Germans say—'the baby with the bath,' and, after pardoning his false friend, proceeds to give away (in every sense) his most loyal lady-love to her would-be ravisher. Here they are, as printed in the Folio:

Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me
Forgive me Valentine if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient Ransome for offence,
I tender't heere I doe as truely suffer,
As ere I did commit.

¹ The Folio allows no stop heavier than a comma to the hurry of this speech.

XIV THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

Val. Then I am paid:
And once again, I doe receive thee honest,
Who by Repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heauen, nor earth, for these are pleas'd
By Penitence th' Eternalls wrath's appeas'd.
And that my loue may appeare plaine and free,
All that was mine, in Silvia, I give thee.

Jul. Oh me unhappy

Pro. Looke to the Boy.

Val. Why, Boy?

Why wag. how now? what's the matter? look vp speak.

'All that was mine in Silvia I give thee'—one's impulse, upon this declaration, is to remark that there are, by this time, no gentlemen in Verona.

We must not, without a second thought, pronounce that this and the preceding line are not Shakespeare's—could not have been written by Shakespeare. They are uncouth—but he wrote, first and last, many uncouth lines, and his present editors will not challenge an obvious retort by making affidavit of their private conviction—firm though it be—that he never wrote these. They are dramatically inconsistent: they disappoint all that we suppose ourselves to know of Valentine's character, and so unexpectedly that we feel it like a slap in the face. But again it is not quite enough to say

That he could have deliberately set himself to mar, in this concluding scene, his two silver-point studies of Valentine and Silvia, those may believe who will That he could have done it, and not known what he was doing, is incredible. adding that if he really intended it,

Why, we are left face to face with a mistake in art, an offence against dramatic propriety, which has no distant resemblance to anything else that is Shakespeare's. It is not a matter of youthful inexperience there is no plausibility in the forlorn suggestion that he was imitating the faults of older dramatists The couplet is no part of his conception¹.

¹ Sir George Young in The Reading University College Review, vol. vii. No. 19.

For mediaeval and Renaissance writers had a fashion with Friendship: a literary convention of refining, idealising, exalting it out of all proportion, or at any rate above the proportion it bears, in our modern minds, either to love between man and woman or to parental love. We see it perhaps at its most extravagant in the famous story of Amis and Amile, in which Amile at the command of an angel slays his two children that their blood may wash Amis free of leprosy but we realise it better in Montaigne, balancing his avowals of affection for Étienne de la Boetie against anything and everything he says of marital love for in the Essays we have this disproportion homely, cheerfully, reduced to matter-of-fact and taken for granted. But we need not seek even beyond Shakespeare. That the convention lay strong upon him no one can doubt who studies the Sonnets, or weighs the claims of friendship and love in The Merchant of Venice 'Shall we say, then,' writes Dowden, of this passage, 'that Shakespeare was here sacrificing truth and nature to a convention of the time?' Or may we rather admit that, after all, there is some plausibility in 'the forlorn suggestion' that he was—not 'imitating the faults of older dramatists'—but working on an old play, and that, in the end, after re-furbishing the story and making its characters life-like, he found himself faced with a conventional dénouement and closed the account with a tag of doggerel either contemptuously invented or transferred literally from the corpus vile?

It is possible. and we will give a devil's advocate yet a little farther scope. There is a tradition (which we are unable to trace to its source) that The Two Gentlemen of Verona proved a failure on the stage. If so, nothing in the play would account for it so easily as this most crucial blunder.

Allowing something—not too much, we think—to this tradition, we offer another hypothesis: first asking the reader to turn to our Note on the Copy for The Two

xvi THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

Gentlemen of Verona, pp 77-82 of this volume (noting especially pp. 79-81), where he will find our reasons for believing that the botcher's hand—or, may be, the hands of several botchers—may be detected in our text and throughout it. But here we deal with the most flagrant and vitiating passage, and suggest a possible explanation—there is no possible excuse. It may be, then, that Shakespeare invented a solution which at the first performance was found to be ineffective, that the final scene was partly re-written—not by Shakespeare—and given its crude and conventional coup de théâtre; that in this mutilated form it remained on the play-copy; and that so it reached the printer. We believe, at any rate, that no one can re-read this scene carefully without detecting that pieces of it are Shakespeare's and other pieces have been inserted by a 'faker' who not only was not Shakespeare, but did not possess even a rudimentary ear for blank verse. The opening lines bewray him.

1 Outlaw Come, come, be patient we must bring you to our captain.

Silvia A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learned me how to brook this patiently.

2 Outlaw. Come, bring her away

1 Outlaw Where is the gentleman that was with her?

3 Outlaw Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us.
But Moses and Valerius follow him

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,
There is our captain we'll follow him that's fled.

Shakespeare's prosody is often easy-going, and not seldom—to a pedantic mind—perverse. but to our ear it is never slipshod or vicious in that way. And this faultiness exactly coincides with a significant, if a minor, fault of dramatic craftsmanship—the damnation of Sir Eglamour's taking-off. Sir Eglamour—not to be confused with the knight of that name who figures among Julia's suitors in Act i, Scene 2¹—has obviously been dragged into the plot by no fault of his own. He is just an honest, simple gentleman on whose chivalry Silvia makes claim for help in a most difficult adventure.

¹ But cf. note 1. 2. 9.

O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman .
Upon whose faith and honour I repose

His answer is prompt, as his service is punctual Without warning or excuse he is reported to have taken to his heels like the veriest poltroon! At once, helped by muddled versification, we perceive that this scene is running agley, that some interposing hand is murdering the verse along with dramatic consistency. Amid lines that have Shakespeare's trick and cadence are thrust strange ones that no ear can accept for his Suddenly, with the crisis, we come upon the doggerel.

And that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee

Having noted the jingle which follows on the rhyme of 'pleased' and 'appeased,' we note further that there is only one other instance in this melodiously written play of an unrhymed speech finished off with two rhymed couplets, and that is the very speech (uttered by Proteus) which, if it have any meaning at all, improves in caddishness upon Valentine's offence:

O heaven, were man
But constant, he were perfect; that one error
Fills him with faults

—so far Shakespeare, perhaps: now for cacophony followed by nonsense:

makes him run through all th'sins,
Inconstancy falls off ere it begins.
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?

Can anyone believe Shakespeare guilty of this pair of tags: the first lame in scansion and unmeaning, the second balanced for our choice between nonsense and rascality?

xviii THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

And where is Silvia in all this business? She is merely left. She utters not a word after Valentine's pseudo-magnificent, pseudo-romantic, renunciation. 'A curious essay,' says Dowden, 'might be written upon the silences of some of the characters of Shakespeare' It would be an ingenious one if it could account for Silvia's silence here save by the alternatives, either of her being sick and tired of both her lovers, or of the whole scene's being (as we submit) a piece of theatre botchwork patched upon the original.

But it will be asked, if we omit

All that was mine in Silvia I give thee

—how do we account for Julia's swoon? Our own answer is that we do not try to account for it: our hypothesis being that the swoon and the couplet together are 'other man's work', that Shakespeare had another dénouement which possibly proved ineffective on the stage, and that the one we have is a stage-adaptor's substitute. To be sure, the stage-direction 'faints' or 'swoons' is an interpolation, not found in the Folio (which, in the text of this play, provides no stage-directions): but it seems to be required by the context as the passage stands. Sir George Young surmises that Julia does not really swoon but shams swooning. He holds Julia to be, in comparison with Silvia, something of an ordinary wench; that she and Proteus together are portrayed as 'lovers of common clay, of less than second-rate refinement,' meant to be a foil to chivalrous Valentine and Silvia. On our reading of the play we dissent. we really must divorce Julia from Proteus at this point. But we think it fair to give his interpretation:

...Julia had all her quick and rather vulgar wits about her. She thinks her little romance has been in the background long enough. She heaves a deep sigh and throws herself on the grass. This she does, as she proceeds directly to explain, because she has 'forgotten' to give Silvia the ring which

Silvia has positively refused to receive from her. She then proceeds to play off on Proteus the same sly little game, of handing him the wrong ring, which she had already tried and found superfluous with Silvia, when she handed her the wrong letter. Her demeanour is an obvious make-up, to attract attention and lead to the recognition for which she has become impatient

This may—though we doubt it—interpret the passage as it stands. But it offends against our opinion of Julia: and, for the rest, we content ourselves with the questions we have raised on the scene. We know that when Shakespeare was old enough, and craftsman enough, to devise the ‘recognition’ in the last scene of Cymbeline, with its

Why did you throw your wedded lady from you?

he could do better. and we believe that even in The Two Gentlemen he wrote something which, if theatrically ineffective, was better, because more natural, than the text allows us to know.

Q

TO THE READER

The following is a brief description of the punctuation and other typographical devices employed in the text, which have been more fully explained in the Note on Punctuation and the Textual Introduction to be found in The Tempest volume.

An obelisk (†) implies corruption or emendation, and suggests a reference to the Notes.

A single bracket at the beginning of a speech signifies an 'aside'.

Four dots represent a full-stop in the original, except when it occurs at the end of a speech, and they mark a long pause.

Original colons or semicolons, which denote a somewhat shorter pause, are retained, or represented as three dots when they appear to possess special dramatic significance.

Similarly, significant commas have been given as dashes.

Round brackets are taken from the original, and mark a significant change of voice, when the original brackets seem to imply little more than the drop in tone accompanying parenthesis, they are conveyed by commas or dashes.

In plays for which both Folio and Quarto texts exist, passages taken from the text not selected as the basis for the present edition will be enclosed within square brackets.

Single inverted commas (‘ ’) are editorial; double ones (“ ”) derive from the original, where they are used to draw attention to maxims, quotations, etc.

The reference number for the first line is given at the head of each page. Numerals in square brackets are placed at the beginning of the traditional acts and scenes.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN
OF VERONA

The scene: Verona, Milan and a forest near Milan

CHARACTERS IN THE PLAY

DUKE OF MILAN, father to Silvia

VALENTINE }
PROTEUS } the two gentlemen

ANTONIO, father to Proteus

THURIO, a foolish rival to Valentine

EGLAMOUR, agent for Silvia in her escape

SPEED, a clownish servant to Valentine

LAUNCE, the like to Proteus

PANTHINO, servant to Antonio

Host, where Julia lodges

Outlaws, with Valentine

JULIA, beloved of Proteus

SILVIA, beloved of Valentine

LUCETTA, waiting-woman to Julia

Servants, musicians

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

[1.1] Verona: a street near Julia's house; trees and a seat

VALENTINE, dressed for a journey · PROTEUS

Valentine. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus;
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits.
Were't not affection chains thy tender days
To the sweet glances of thy honoured love,
I rather would entreat thy company
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardized at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness
But, since thou lov'st, love still and thrive therein,
Even as I would when I to love begin.

Proteus. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu
Think on thy Proteus, when thou—haply—seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel .
Wish me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap, and in thy danger—
If ever danger do environ thee—

Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine

Valentine. And on a love-book pray for my success!

Proteus. Upon some book I love I'll pray for thee.

Valentine. That's on some shallow story of deep love,
How young Leander crossed the Hellespont.

Proteus. That's a deep story of a deeper love,
For he was more than over-shoes in love.

Valentine. 'Tis true; for you are over-boots in love,
And yet you never swam the Hellespont.

Proteus. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots.

Valentine. No, I will not; for it boots thee not.

Proteus. What?

Valentine. To be in love; where scorn is bought with groans:

Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs: one fading moment's mirth,

With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights;

If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain,

If lost, why then a grievous labour won,

How ever but a folly bought with wit,

Or else a wit by folly vanquishéd

Proteus. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool.

Valentine. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove Proteus. 'Tis Love you cavil at. I am not Love.

Valentine. Love is your master, for he masters you;

And he that is so yokéd by a fool,

Methinks should not be chronicled for wise

Proteus. Yet writers say; As in the sweetest bud

The eating canker dwells, so eating love

Inhabits in the finest wits of all

Valentine. And writers say; As the most forward bud

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit

Is turned to folly—blasting in the bud,

Losing his verdure even in the prime,

And all the fair effects of future hopes

But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee

That art a votary to fond desire?

Once more adieu: my father at the road

Expects my coming, there to see me shipped.

Proteus. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Valentine. Sweet Proteus, no: now let us take our leave;
To Milan let me hear from thee by letters

Of thy success in love; and what news else
Betideth here in absence of thy friend:
And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Proteus. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan.

Valentine. As much to you at home: and so, farewell.

[they embrace and Valentine goes his way]

Proteus. He after honour hunts, I after love;
He leaves his friends, to dignify them more;
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love...
Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphosed me:
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time;
War with good counsel; set the world at nought;
Made wit with musing, weak, heart sick with thought.

SPEED runs up breathless, carrying luggage

Speed. Sir Proteus . 'save you .saw you my master?

Proteus. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipped already,
And I have played the sheep in losing him.

Proteus. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray,
An if the shepherd be awhile away.

Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd then, and I a sheep?

Proteus. I do

Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Proteus. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Proteus. True: and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Proteus. It shall go hard but I'll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore I am no sheep.

Proteus. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore thou art a sheep.

Speed. Such another proof will make me cry 'baa.'

Proteus. But dost thou hear? gav'st thou my letter to Julia?

Speed. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton, and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.

Proteus. Here's too small a pasture for such a store of muttons.

Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her.

Proteus. Nay, in that you are a-stray . 'twere best pound you.

Speed. Nay sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.

Proteus. You mistake; I mean the pound, a pinfold.

Speed. From a pound to a pin—fold it over and over, 'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your lover.

Proteus. †But what said she? [Speed nods] Nod?

Speed. Ay.

Proteus. Nod-ay, why that's noddy.

Speed. You mistook, sir: I say she did nod; and you ask me if she did nod, and I say, 'Ay.'

Proteus. And that set together, is 'noddy.'

Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains

Proteus. No, no, you shall have it for bearing the letter.

Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fain to bear with you.

Proteus. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?

Speed. Marry sir, the letter very orderly—having nothing but the word 'noddy' for my pains.

Proteus. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.

Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse

Proteus. Come, come, open the matter in brief; what said she?

Speed. Open your purse, that the money and the matter may be both at once delivered.

Proteus. Well, sir: [giving him money] here is for your pains. What said she?

Speed [eyeing the coin with contempt]. Truly sir, I think you'll hardly win her.

Proteus. Why! couldst thou perceive so much from her?

Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; No, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter: And being so hard to me that brought your mind; I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling your mind.... Give her no token but stones, for she's as hard as steel.

Proteus. What, said she—nothing?

Speed [dryly]. No, not so much as 'Take this for thy pains'... To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testerned me, in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself; and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master. [he swaggers off]

Proteus [angry]. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wrack,

Which cannot perish having thee aboard,

Being destined to a drier death on shore...

I must go send some better messenger.

I fear my Julia would not deign my lines,

Receiving them from such a worthless post. [he goes]

[1. 2.] A door opens: JULIA and LUCETTA come forth

Julia. But say, Lucetta—now we are alone—
Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Lucetta. Ay madam, so you stumble not unheedfully

Julia [sits]. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

Lucetta. Please you repeat their names, I'll show my mind
According to my shallow simple skill

Julia. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?

Lucetta. As of a knight, well-spoken, neat, and fine;
But, were I you, he never should be mine.

Julia. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

Lucetta. Well of his wealth, but of himself, so, so.

Julia [looks down]. What think'st thou of the gentle
Proteus?

Lucetta. Lord, lord to see what folly reigns in us!

Julia [sharply]. How now! what means this-passion at his name?

Lucetta [demure]. Pardon, dear madam—'tis a passing shame,

That I (unworthy body as I am!)

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Julia. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Lucetta. Then thus of many good I think him best.

Julia. Your reason?

Lucetta. I have no other but a woman's reason
I think him so, because I think him so.

Julia. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Lucetta. Ay...if you thought your love not cast away.

Julia. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never moved me.

Lucetta. Yet he, of all the rest, I think best loves ye.

Julia. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Lucetta. Fire, that's closest kept, burns most of all.

Julia. They do not love, that do not show their love

Lucetta. O they love least, that let men know their love

Julia. I would, I knew his mind.

Lucetta. Peruse this paper, madam. [Julia takes it]

Julia. 'To Julia'. Say, from whom?

Lucetta. That the contents will show.

Julia. Say, say who gave it thee?

Lucetta. Sir Valentine's page and sent,
I think, from Proteus;

He would have given it you, but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it pardon the fault, I pray.

Julia [feigns anger] Now—by my modesty!—a goodly broker.

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?

To whisper, and conspire against my youth?

Now trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,

And you an officer fit for the place [holding out the letter]

There . take the paper see it be returned,

Or else return no more into my sight.

Lucetta. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate.

Julia [stamps] Will you be gone?

Lucetta [going within]. That you may ruminate.

Julia. And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter,
It were a shame to call her back again,

And pray her to a fault for which I chid her .

What 'fool is she, that knows I am a maid,

And would not force the letter to my view?

Since maids, in modesty, say 'no' to that

Which they would have the profferer construe 'ay'

Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love;

That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse,

And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod!

How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here!

How angerly I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforced my heart to smile!

My penance is, to call Lucetta back
And ask remission for my folly past....
What ho! Lucetta!

LUCETTA returning, drops the letter

Lucetta. What would your ladyship?

Julia. Is it near dinner-time?

Lucetta. I would it were—

That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid. [she takes up the letter]

Julia. What is't that you
Took up so gingerly?

Lucetta. Nothing.

Julia. Why didst thou stoop then?

Lucetta. To take a paper up, that I let fall.

Julia. And is that paper nothing?

Lucetta. Nothing concerning me.

Julia. Then let it lie, for those that it concerns.

Lucetta. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,
Unless it have a false interpreter.

Julia. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Lucetta That I might sing it, madam, to a tune. .
Give me a note—your ladyship can set.

Julia. As little by such toys as may be possible:
Best sing it to the tune of 'Light o' love.'

Lucetta. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Julia. Heavy? belike it hath some burden then.

Lucetta. Ay...and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Julia. And why not you?

Lucetta. I cannot reach so high.

Julia. Let's see your song...

She snatches at the letter; Lucetta hastily hides it behind her back, and runs

How now, minion! [giving chase]

Lucetta [over her shoulder]. Keep tune there still; so you will sing it out.

[Julia seizes her] And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Julia [pinching her]. You do not?

Lucetta. No, madam, 'tis too sharp.

Julia [slapping her]. You—minion—are too saucy.

Lucetta. Nay, now you are too flat;

And mar the concord, with too harsh a descant:

There wanteth but a 'mean' to fill your song.

Julia. The mean is drowned with your unruly bass.

Lucetta. Indeed, I 'bid the base' for Proteus.

Julia. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;

[she tears the letter

Here is a coil with protestation ..

Go, get you gone . [Lucetta stoops] and let the papers lie...

You would be fingering them, to anger me.

Lucetta. She makes it strange, but she would be best pleased

To be so angred with another letter [she goes within

Julia. Nay, would I were so angred with the same...

O hateful hands, to tear such loving words;

Injurious wasps, to feed on such sweet honey,

And kill the bees that yield it with your stings;

I'll kiss each several paper, for amends... [picking up pieces

Look, here is writ 'kind Julia'. .unkind Julia,

As in revenge of thy ingratitude,

I throw thy name against the bruising stones,

Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain ...

And here is writ 'love-wounded Proteus' ...

Poor wounded name: my bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly healed;

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss ..

But twice, or thrice, was 'Proteus' written down .

[seeking on her knees

Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name: that, some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful-hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. .
Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ:
'Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus
To the sweet Julia' .that I'll tear away. .
And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining names;
Thus will I fold them, one upon another;
Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

LUCETTA returns

Lucetta. Madam... [Julia starts up
Dinner is ready and your father stays.

Julia [coldly]. Well, let us go.

Lucetta What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Julia. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Lucetta. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down....
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.

[she gathers them up

Julia I see you have a month's mind to them.

Lucetta. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Julia Come, come, will't please you go?

[they go in to dinner

[1.3] Verona: a room in Antonio's house

ANTONIO enters with PANTHINO, his man

Antonio. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that,
Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?

Panthino 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.

Antonio Why? what of him?

Panthino. He wondred that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discover islands far away,
Some, to the studious universities
For any or for all these exercises
He said that Proteus, your son, was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home;
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.

Antonio. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammering. ..
I have considered well his loss of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutored in the world.
Experience is by industry achieved,
And perfected by the swift course of time:
Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Panthino. I think your lordship is not ignorant,
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Antonio. I know it well.

Panthino. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him thither.

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

Antonio. I like thy counsel .well hast thou advised
And that thou mayst perceive how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make known,
Even with the speediest expedition
I will despatch him to the emperor's court.

Panthino. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.

Antonio. Good company: with them shall Proteus go...

PROTEUS enters, conning a letter

And in good time. .now will we break with him.

(Proteus. Sweet love, sweet lines, sweet life—
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart,
Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn.
O, that our fathers would applaud our loves, .
To seal our happiness with their consents . .
O heavenly Julia. ..

Antonio. How now! what letter are you reading there?

Proteus. May't please your lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine;
Delivered by a friend that came from him.

Antonio. Lend me the letter: let me see what news.

Proteus. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well beloved,
And daily gracéd by the emperor,
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Antonio. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Proteus. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.

Antonio. My will is something sorted with his wish:
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end...
I am resolved that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentinus in the emperor's court:

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

To-morrow be in readiness to go—

Excuse it not...for I am péremptory.

Proteus. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided,
Please you deliberate a day or two.

Antonio. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after thee:

No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go:

Come on, Panthino; you shall be employed

To hasten on his expedition

[Antonio goes out, followed by Panthino]

Proteus. Thus have I shunned the fire, for fear of burning,
And drenched me in the sea, where I am drowned ..

I feared to show my father Julia's letter,

Lest he should take exceptions to my love,

And with the vantage of mine own excuse

Hath he excepted most against my love....

O, how this spring of love resembleth

The uncertain glory of an April day,

Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,

And by and by a cloud takes all away

PANTHINO comes to the door

Panthino. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you—
He is in haste, therefore I pray you go.

Proteus. Why, this it is. my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answers 'no.' [he goes out]

[2. 1.] A street in Milan

VALENTINE with SPEED following. VALENTINE drops a glove

Speed [runs up] Sir, your glove.

Valentine. Not mine: my gloves are on.

Speed. Why then this may be yours, for this is but one.

Valentine Ha! let me see . ay, give it me, it's mine...

Sweet ornament that decks a thing divine—

Ah Silvia, Silvia

Speed [calls]. Madam Silvia! Madam Silvia!

Valentine How now, sirrah!

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.

Valentine Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir, or else I mistook.

Valentine. Well . you'll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Valentine. Go to, sir, tell me do you know Madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Valentine. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed Marry, by these special marks . first, you have learned—like Sir Proteus—to wreath your arms like a malcontent; to relish a love-song, like a robin-redbreast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A. B. C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak puling, like a beggar at Hallowmas . You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you looked sadly, it was for want of money . and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Valentine. Are all these things perceived in me?

Speed. They are all perceived without ye.

Valentine Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you? nay, that's certain, for, without you were so simple, none else would: but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urinal: that not an eye that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Valentine. But tell me: dost thou know my Lady Silvia?

Speed. She that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Valentine. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why sir, I know her not.

Valentine. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Speed. Is she not hard-favoured, sir?

Valentine. Not so fair, boy, as well-favoured.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Valentine. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well-favoured.

Valentine. I mean that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Valentine. How painted? and how out of count?

Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Valentine. How esteem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.

Speed. You never saw her since she was deformed?

Valentine. How long hath she been deformed?

Speed. Ever since you loved her.

Valentine. I have loved her ever since I saw her, and still I see her beautiful.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Valentine. Why?

Speed. Because love is blind O, that you had mine eyes, or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at Sir Proteus for going ungartered

Valentine. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity for he, being in love, could not see to garter his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Valentine. Belike, boy, then you are in love—for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True, sir I was in love with my bed. I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Valentine. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.

Valentine. Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Valentine. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Valentine. No, boy, but as well as I can do them...
Peace, here she comes

SILVIA approaches with her maid

(Speed. O excellent motion .O exceeding puppet . now will he interpret to her.

Valentine [bows low]. Madam and mistress, a thousand good-morrows.

(Speed. O, 'give-ye-good-e'en. .here's a million of manners'

Silvia [bows]. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.

(Speed. He should give her interest and she gives it him.

Valentine. As you enjoined me; I have writ your letter
Unto the secret nameless friend of yours...

[he gives it her

Which I was much unwilling to proceed in,

But for my duty to your ladyship.

Silvia [perusing it]. I thank you, gentle servant—'tis very clerkly done.

Valentine. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off: For, being ignorant to whom it goes, I writ at random, very doubtfully.

Silvia [coldly]. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

Valentine. No, madam, so it stead you, I will write—Please you command—a thousand times as much... And yet—

Silvia. A pretty period ..well I guess the sequel, 'And yet I will not name it': 'and yet I care not' .
[she offers him the letter]

And yet take this again and yet I thank you: Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

(Speed And yet you will and yet another 'yet.'

Valentine [flushing]. What means your ladyship?

Do you not like it?

Silvia. Yes, yes the lines are very quaintly writ, But—since unwillingly—take them again. ..

[offering the letter again]

Nay, take them.

Valentine. Madam, they are for you.

Silvia. Ay, ay: you writ them, sir, at my request, But I will none of them: they are for you: I would have had them writ more movingly ..

[he takes the letter]

Valentine. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

Silvia. And when it's writ...for my sake read it over, And, if it please you, so. ..if not...why, so ..

Valentine. If it please me, madam, what then?

Silvia. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour; And so good-morrow, servant. [she bows and passes on]

Speed. O jest unseen. .inscrutable .invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple...
My master sues to her and she hath taught her suitor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better?
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Valentine. How now, sir! what are you reasoning with yourself?

Speed. Nay...I was rhyming . 'tis you that have the reason.

Valentine. To do what?

Speed. To be a spokesman from Madam Silvia.

Valentine. To whom?

Speed. To yourself why, she wooes you by a figure.

Valentine. What figure?

Speed. By a letter, I should say.

Valentine. Why, she hath not writ to me?

Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?

Valentine. No, believe me

Speed. No believing you indeed, sir.
But did you perceive her earnest?

Valentine. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.

Valentine. That's the letter I writ to her friend.

Speed. And that letter hath she delivered, and there an end.

Valentine. I would it were no worse

Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well:
For often you have writ to her: and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply—
Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover,

Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover!

All this I speak in print, for in print I found it....

Why muse you, sir? 'tis dinner-time.

Valentine [sighs]. I have dined.

Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir: though the chameleon Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my victuals; and would fain have meat. O, be not like your mistress—be moved, be moved. [they move on]

[2. 2.] Verona the street near Julia's house

PROTEUS and JULIA on a seat beneath the trees

Proteus. Have patience, gentle Julia .

Julia. I must, where is no remedy.

Proteus. When possibly I can, I will return

Julia. If you turn not you will return the sooner:

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.

[she gives him a ring]

Proteus. Why then we'll make exchange; here, take you this.

[he gives her another]

Julia. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

Proteus. Here is my hand for my true constancy ..

And when that hour o'er-slips me in the day,

Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake,

The next ensuing hour some foul mischance

Torment me for my love's forgetfulness ..

My father stays my coming. .answer not ..

The tide is now; nay, not thy tide of tears—

That tide will stay me longer than I should....

Julia, farewell... [they embrace, she goes within, weeping]

What! gone without a word?

Ay, so true love should do: it cannot speak—

For truth hath better deeds than words to grace it

PANTHINO appears in the distance

Panthino [calling]. Sir Proteus! you are stayed for.

Proteus. Go...I come, I come...

Alas, this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [he goes]

[2. 3] LAUNCE slowly approaches weeping, leading a dog, which he ties to a tree

Launce. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping: all the kind of the Launces have this very fault...I have received my proportion, like the Prodigious son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think Crab, my dog, be the sourest-natured dog that lives: my mother weeping; my father wailing; my sister crying; our maid howling; our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity—yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear: he is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting: why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting: nay, I'll show you the manner of it .. [takes off his shoes] This shoe is my father...no, this left shoe is my father; no, no, this left shoe is my mother. nay, that cannot be so neither.. yes; it is so, it is so: it hath the worser sole... this shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father...a vengeance on't! there 'tis .. [places them on the seat] Now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand. this hat is Nan, our maid. I am the dog.. no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog...O, the dog is me, and I am myself: ay, so, so... Now come I to my father; [kneels] 'Father, your blessing': now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father; [kisses one shoe] well, he weeps on ..Now come I to my mother: O, that she could speak now, like a twood woman: well, I kiss her: [kisses the other shoe] why there 'tis; here's my mother's breath up and down...Now come I to my sister; mark the moan she makes ..now the dog all this while sheds not a tear; nor speaks a word. but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

PANTHINO returns, in haste

Panthino. Launce, away, away aboard ..thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with oars .What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Away ass, you'll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce [sorrowfully]. It is no matter if the tied were lost, for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

Panthino. What's the unkindest tide?

Launce. Why, he that's tied here, Crab, my dog.

Panthino. Tut, man I mean thou'lt lose the flood, and in losing the flood lose thy voyage, and in losing thy voyage lose thy master, and in losing thy master lose thy service, and in losing thy service—why dost thou stop my mouth?

Launce. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Panthino. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launce. In thy tale.

Panthino. In my tail!

Launce. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service—and the tied...[he looses Crab] Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Panthino. Come come away, man—I was sent to call thee.

Launce [threatening]. Sir. .call me what thou dar'st!

Panthino. Wilt thou go?

Launce. Well, I will go.

[they hurry away]

[2.4] Milan. a room in the Duke's palace

VALENTINE and SILVIA, seated together, talking in low tones, SPEED behind VALENTINE; Sir THURIO (foppishly attired) watching them at a distance (Silvia Servant.

(Valentine. Mistress!

(Speed [in his ear] Master, Sir Thurio frowns on you.

(Valentine. Ay, boy, it's for love.

(Speed Not of you.

(Valentine Of my mistress then.

(Speed 'Twere good you knocked him. [he goes out

Silvia [lightly, aloud] Servant, you are sad

Valentine. Indeed, madam, I seem so

Thurio Seem you that you are not?

Valentine. Haply I do

Thurio. So do counterfeits.

Valentine. So do you.

Thurio. What seem I that I am not?

Valentine. Wise.

Thurio. What instance of the contrary?

Valentine Your folly.

Thurio. And how quote you my folly?

Valentine. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thurio. My jerkin is a doublet.

Valentine. Well, then, I'll double your folly.

Thurio. How!

Silvia. What, angry, Sir Thurio? do you change colour?

Valentine. Give him leave, madam—he is a kind of chameleon.

Thurio. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Valentine. You have said, sir.

Thurio. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time

Valentine. I know it well, sir, you always end ere you begin

Silvia A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off

Valentine. 'Tis indeed, madam—we thank the giver.

Silvia. Who is that, servant?

Valentine. Yourself, sweet lady, for you gave the fire. Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows, kindly in your company.

Thurio. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Valentine. I know it well, sir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers: for it appears by their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words.

Silvia. No more, gentlemen, no more Here comes my father.

The DUKE enters with a letter in his hand

Duke [smiling] Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset ...

Sir Valentine, your father is in good health—
What say you to a letter from your friends
Of much good news?

Valentine. My lord, I will be thankful
To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Valentine. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman
To be of worth, and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Valentine. Ay, my good lord—a son that well deserves
The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Valentine. I know him as myself: for from our infancy
We have conversed, and spent our hours together,
And though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection...
Yet hath Sir Proteus, for that's his name,
Made use and fair advantage of his days:
His years but young, but his experience old.
His head unmellowed, but his judgement ripe
And, in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow)
He is complete in feature and in mind,
With all good grace, to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but if he make this good,
He is as worthy for an empress' love,
As meet to be an emperor's counsellor
Well, sir, this gentleman is come to me
With commendation from great potentates,
And here he means to spend his time awhile.
I think 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Valentine. Should I have wished a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him then according to his worth:
Silvia, I speak to you, and you, Sir Thurio—
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it.

I will send him hither to you presently [he goes out]

Valentine This is the gentleman I told your ladyship
Had come along with me, but that his mistress
Did hold his eyes locked in her crystal looks.

Silvia. Belike that now she hath enfranchised them
Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Valentine. Nay, sure, I think she holds them prisoners still.

Silvia. Nay, then he should be blind—and, being blind,
How could he see his way to seek out you?

Valentine. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thurio They say, that Love hath not an eye at all.

Valentine. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself—
Upon a homely object love can wink.

Silvia. Have done, have done here comes the gentleman.

PROTEUS enters; THURIO goes out, shrugging his shoulders

Valentine. Welcome, dear Proteus [they embrace] Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.

Silvia. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wished to hear from

Valentine. Mistress, it is [he presents him] Sweet lady, 'entertain him

To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Silvia [bowing] Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Proteus. Not so, sweet lady, but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress

Valentine. Leave off discourse of disability...
Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant

Proteus. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Silvia. And duty never yet did want his meed .

[he kisses her hand]

Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Proteus. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Silvia. That you are welcome?

Proteus. That you are worthless.

THURIO returns

Thurio. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Silvia. I wait upon his pleasure...Come, Sir Thurio,
Go with me . Once more, new servant, welcome;
I'll leave you to confer of home-affairs.
When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Proteus. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Silvia goes out, with Thurio

Valentine. Now tell me: how do all from whence you came?

Proteus. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Valentine. And how do yours?

Proteus. I left them all in health.

Valentine. How does your lady? and how thrives your love?

Proteus. My tales of love were wont to weary you,
I know you joy not in a love-discourse.

Valentine. Ay, Proteus, but that life is altered now.
I have done penance for contemning love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punished me
With bitter fasts, with penitential groans,
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs,
For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chased sleep from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow...
O, gentle Proteus, Love's a mighty lord,
And hath so humbled me, as I confess
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his service no such joy on earth
Now, no discourse, except it be of love.
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked name of love.

Proteus. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the idol that you worship so?

Valentine. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Proteus. No; but she is an earthly paragon.

Valentine. Call her divine.

Proteus. I will not flatter her.

Valentine. O, flatter me, for love delights in praises.

Proteus. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you

Valentine. Then speak the truth by her, if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth

Proteus. Except my mistress.

Valentine. Sweet: except not any,
Except thou wilt except against my love.

Proteus. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Valentine. And I will help thee to prefer her too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour—
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower,
And make rough winter everlastingly.

Proteus. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Valentine. Pardon me, Proteus, all I can is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone

Proteus. Then let her alone

Valentine. Not for the world: why man, she is mine own,
And I as rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold. . .
Forgive me that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes—
Only for his possessions are so huge—
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Proteus. But she loves you?

Valentine. Ay, and we are betrothed: nay more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight,
Determined of: how I must climb her window—

The ladder made of cords—and all the means
Plotted and 'greed on for my happiness ...
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Proteus. Go on before: I shall enquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessities that I needs must use,
And then I'll presently attend you.

Valentine [at the door]. Will you make haste?

Proteus. I will. . . [Valentine departs]
Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
†It is mine... or Valentine's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus?
She is fair; and so is Julia that I love—
That I did love, for now my love is thawed,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was....
Methinks my zeal to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not as I was wont.
O, but I love his lady too-too much,
And that's the reason I love him so little. .
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzled my reason's light:
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind....
If I can check my erring love, I will—
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[he goes out, musing]

[2. 5.] Milan: a street near the quay; an alehouse hard by

SPEED meeting LAUNCE and his dog

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to †Padua.

Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome . I reckon this always—that a man is never undone till he be hanged, nor never welcome to a place till some certain shot be paid and the hostess say ‘welcome.’

Speed. Come on, you madcap: I’ll to the alehouse with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes But, sirrah, how did thy master part with Madam Julia?

Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? Shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No; they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry, thus—when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou! I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not! My staff understands me!

Speed. What thou sayst?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee, I’ll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Launce. Why, stand under...and understand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will’t be a match?

Launce. Ask my dog—if he say ‘ay,’ it will: if he say ‘no,’ it will: if he shake his tail and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. ’Tis well that I get it so...But Launce, how sayst thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Launce. A notable lubber: as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistak’st me.

Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee, I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love .If thou wilt, go with me to the alehouse, if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to ‘go to the ale’ with a Christian Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. [they enter the alehouse]

[2.6.] PROTEUS slowly passes, on his way to the quay

Proteus. To leave my Julia .shall I be forsworn?
To love fair Silvia .shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn ...
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury ...
Love bade me swear, and love bids me forswear;
O sweet-suggesting love, if thou has sinned,
Teach me—thy tempted subject—to excuse it....
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun

Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken,
And he wants wit that wants resolvéd will
To learn his wit t'exchange the bad for better;
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue, to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferred
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do:
But there I leave to love where I should love
Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose—
If I keep them, I needs must lose myself:
If I lose them, thus find I by their loss—
For Valentine, myself. for Julia, Silvia ..
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still more precious in itself.
And Silvia—witness Heaven, that made her fair!—
Shews Julia but a swarthy Ethiop....
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Remembring that my love to her is dead ...
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend ...
I cannot now prove constant to myself,
Without some treachery used to Valentine....
This night he meaneth with a corded ladder
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window,
Myself in counsel his competitor ..
Now presently I'll give her father notice
Of their disguising and pretended flight
Who, all enraged, will banish Valentine:
For Thurio he intends shall wed his daughter
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift!

[he continues his way]

[2.7] Verona: a room in Julia's house

JULIA, studying a map; LUCETTA, sewing

Julia [looks up]. Counsel, Lucetta, gentle girl assist me.
And, e'en in kind love, I do conjure thee,
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly charáctered and engraved,
To lesson me, and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Lucetta. Alas, the way is wearisome and long.

Julia. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps—
Much less shall she that hath love's wings to fly,
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as Sir Proteus.

Lucetta. Better forbear till Proteus make return.

Julia. O, know'st thou not his looks are my soul's food?
Pity the dearth that I have pinéd in,
By longing for that food so long a time ..
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words

Lucetta. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's éxtreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Julia. The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns
The current that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopped, impatiently doth rage:
But when his fair course is not hinderéd
He makes sweet music with th'enamelled stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge .
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And so by many winding nooks he strays,

†With willing sport, to the wide ocean .
Then let me go, and hinder not my course
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love—
And there I'll rest, as after much turmoil
A blessed soul doth in Elysium

Lucetta But in what habit will you go along?

Julia Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseem some well-reputed page

Lucetta. Why then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Julia. No, girl, I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots.

To be fantastic may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be

Lucetta What fashion—madam—shall I make your breeches?

Julia That fits as well as 'Tell me, good my lord,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?'

Why, e'en what fashion thou best likes, Lucetta

Lucetta. You must needs have them with a cod-piece, madam

Julia. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favoured.

Lucetta. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin,
Unless you have a cod-piece to stick pins on.

Julia Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly .
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unstaïd a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandalized.

Lucetta. If you think so, then stay at home and go not.

Julia. Nay, that I will not.

Lucetta. Then never dream on infamy, but go:
If Proteus like your journey when you come,
No matter who's displeased when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleased with all.

Julia. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances of infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus

Lucetta. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Julia. Base men, that use them to so base effect;
But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth—
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles,
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His tears pure messengers sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth.

Lucetta. Pray heaven he prove so, when you come to him.

Julia. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only deserve my love by loving him,
And presently go with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of
To furnish me upon my longing journey:
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation,
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come; answer not but to it presently—
I am impatient of my tarriance. [they go out]

[3.1.] Milan before the Duke's palace

The DUKE, THURIO and PROTEUS come forth

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile—
We have some secrets to confer about .

[Thurio bows and departs]

Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Proteus. My gracious lord, that which I would discover
The law of friendship bids me to conceal,
But when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done to me—undeserving as I am—
My duty pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me
Know, worthy prince, Sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter
Myself am one made privy to the plot .
I know you have determined to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates,
And should she thus be stol'n away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age ..
Thus—for my duty's sake—I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows which would press you down,
Being unprevented, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care,
Which to requite, command me while I live ...
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judged me fast asleep,
And oftentimes have purposed to forbid
Sir Valentine her company and my court:
But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so, unworthily, disgrace the man—
A rashness that I ever yet have shunned—
I gave him gentle looks, thereby to find
That which thyself hast now disclosed to me . .
And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept:

And thence she cannot be conveyed away.

Proteus Know, noble lord, they have devised a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down:
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently;
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him .
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aimed at .

For, love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence

Duke Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Proteus. Adieu, my lord, Sir Valentine is coming.

[he retires into the palace]

VALENTINE passes hurriedly, cloaked and booted

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Valentine Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them

Duke Be they of much import?

Valentine. The tenour of them doth but signify
My health and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay then, no matter stay with me awhile—
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near wherein thou must be secret .

[he takes him by the arm]

'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio to my daughter.

Valentine I know it well, my lord—and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities
Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter.
Cannot your grace win her to fancy him?

Duke. No, trust me, she is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty,
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me as if I were her father:
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers—
Upon advice—hath drawn my love from her,
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherished by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolved to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in.
Then let her beauty be her wedding-dower:
For me, and my possessions, she esteems not.

Valentine. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady in †Verona here
Whom I affect but she is nice and coy,
And nought esteems my aged eloquence ..
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor—
For long ago I have forgot to court,
Besides, the fashion of the time is changed—
How and which way I may bestow myself
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Valentine. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Valentine. A woman sometime scorns what best contents her .

Send her another. never give her o'er—
For scorn at first makes after-love the more .
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you.
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone,
For why, the fools are mad, if left alone:
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say—

For 'get you gone' she doth not mean 'away':
Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces
Though ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke But she I mean is promised by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth,
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Valentine. Why, then, I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be locked and keys kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Valentine. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.

Valentine. Why, then, a ladder quaintly made of cords,
To cast up, with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero's tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.

Valentine. When would you use it? pray sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.

Valentine. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But, hark thee I will go to her alone—
How shall I best convey the ladder thither?

Valentine. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak that is of any length.

Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn?

Valentine. Ay, my good lord.

Duke. Then let me see thy cloak—
I'll get me one of such another length.

Valentine. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?

I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me....

He snatches Valentine's cloak, the ladder and a letter fall to the ground

What letter is this same? What's here?—'To Silvia'?

And here an engine fit for my proceeding!

I'll be so bold to break the seal for once. [he reads]

'My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly,

'And slaves they are to me, that send them flying.

'O, could their master come, and go as lightly,

'Himself would lodge, where—senseless—they are lying.

'My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them,

'While I, their king, that thither them importune,

'Do curse the grace that with such grace hath blessed them,

'Because myself do want my servants' fortune.

'I curse myself, for they are sent by me,

'That they should harbour where their lord should be.'

What's here?

'Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee' . .

'Tis so: and here's the ladder for the purpose

[he turns on Valentine]

Why, Phaethon—for thou art Merops' son!—

Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,

And with thy daring folly burn the world?

Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?

Go base intruder, over-weening slave,

Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates,

And think my patience, more than thy desert,

Is privilege for thy departure hence

Thank me for this more than for all the favours,

Which—all too much!—I have bestowed on thee ..

But if thou linger in my territories
 Longer than swiftest expedition
 Will give thee time to leave our royal court,
 By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love
 I ever bore my daughter, or thyself ..

[Valentine throws himself at his feet]

Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse,
 But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence.

[he turns upon his heel and goes into the palace]

Valentine [prostrate]. And why not death, rather than living torment?

To die, is to be banished from myself,
 And Silvia is myself: banished from her,
 †Is self from self Ah! deadly banishment:
 What light is light, if Silvia be not seen? .
 What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
 Unless it be to think that she is by,
 And feed upon the shadow of perfection....
 Except I be by Silvia in the night,
 There is no music in the nightingale .
 Unless I look on Silvia in the day,
 There is no day for me to look upon .
 She is my essence—and I leave to be,
 If I be not by her fair influence
 Fostered, illumined, cherished, kept alive .
 I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom—
 Tarry I here, I but attend on death—
 But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.

[he buries his face on the ground]

PROTEUS and LAUNCE come from the palace

Proteus Run, boy, run, run, and seek him out.

Launce [courses up and down, and then halloo's] So-ho!
 so-ho!

Proteus. What seest thou?

Launce. Him we go to find. [he noses Valentine
There's not a hair on's head but 'tis a valentine.

Proteus [bends over him]. Valentine!

Valentine No.

Proteus. Who then? his spirit?

Valentine Neither.

Proteus What then?

Valentine. Nothing.

Launce. Can nothing speak? Master, shall I strike?

Proteus. Who wouldst thou strike?

Launce. Nothing.

Proteus. Villain, forbear.

Launce. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you—
[he lifts his staff]

Proteus. Sirrah, I say, forbear Friend Valentine, a word.

Valentine. My ears are stopped, and cannot hear good news,
So much of bad already hath possessed them.

Proteus Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, untuneable and bad.

Valentine [looks up] Is Silvia dead?

Proteus. No, Valentine.

Valentine. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia
Hath she forsworn me?

Proteus No, Valentine.

Valentine. No valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me—
What is your news?

Launce. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are vanished.

Proteus. That thou art banished. .O, that's the news—
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.

Valentine. O, I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me surfeit. ..
Doth Silvia know that I am banished?

Proteus. Ay, ay· and she hath offered to the doom—
Which, unreversed, stands in effectual force—
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears;
Those at her father's churlish feet she tendered,
With them, upon her knees, her humble self,
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them,
As if but now they waxéd pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.. .
Besides, her intercession chafed him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of biding there.

Valentine. No more .unless the next word that thou speak'st

Have some malignant power upon my life:
If so...I pray thee breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless dolour.

Proteus. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
And study help for that which thou lament'st
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good;
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love·
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life:
Hope is a lover's staff—walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts:
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence,
Which, being writ to me, shall be delivered
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love ..

[Valentine rises

The time now serves not to expostulate—
Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate....

[Proteus leads him away

And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love-affairs:
As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Valentine. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste and meet me at the North-gate.

Proteus. Go, sirrah, find him out. .Come, Valentine.

Valentine. O my dear Silvia; hapless Valentine.

[they go]

Launce. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave.. He lives not now that knows me to be in love—yet I am in love—but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me. nor who 'tis I love and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman, I will not tell myself: and yet 'tis a milkmaid yet 'tis not a maid for she hath had gossips yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages . [searches his pockets] She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel—which is much in a bare Christian [pulls out a paper] Here is the catalogue of her condition. 'Inprimis, She can fetch and carry'. . Why, a horse can do no more; nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore is she better than a jade. 'Item, She can milk'—look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

SPEED comes up

Speed. How now, Signior Launce! what news with your mastership?

Launce. With my master's ship? why, it is at sea.

Speed. Well, your old vice still. mistake the word...What news, then, in your paper?

Launce. The black'st news that ever thou heard'st.

Speed. Why, man, how black?

Launce. Why, as black as ink.

Speed. Let me read them.

Launce. Fie on thee jolthead, thou canst not read.

Speed. Thou liest. I can.

Launce. I will try thee tell me this who begot thee?

Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.

Launce. O illiterate loiterer; it was the son of thy grandmother This proves that thou canst not read.

Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper.

Launce. There.. [giving the paper] and Saint Nicholas be thy speed!

Speed. 'Inprimis, She can milk.'

Launce. Ay, that she can.

Speed. 'Item, She brews good ale'

Launce. And thereof comes the proverb. 'Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale'

Speed. 'Item, She can sew.'

Launce. That's as much as to say, 'Can she so?'

Speed. 'Item, She can knit.'

Launce. What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock.

Speed. 'Item, She can wash and scour'

Launce. A special virtue: for then she need not be washed and scoured

Speed. 'Item, She can spin.'

Launce. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Speed. 'Item, She hath many nameless virtues'

Launce. That's as much as to say, bastard virtues: that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. 'Here follow her vices.'

Launce. Close at the heels of her virtues.

Speed. 'Item, She is not to be — fasting, in respect of her breath.'

Launce. Well ..that fault may be mended with a breakfast. .Read on.

Speed. 'Item, She hath a sweet mouth.'

Launce. That makes amends for her sour breath.

Speed. 'Item, She doth talk in her sleep'

Launce. It's no matter for that; so she t^rslip not in her talk.

Speed. 'Item, She is slow in words'

Launce. O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with't, and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed. 'Item, She is proud'

Launce. Out with that too It was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.

Speed. 'Item, She hath no teeth.'

Launce. I care not for that neither because I love crusts

Speed. 'Item, She is curst'

Launce. Well the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. 'Item, She will often praise her liquor.'

Launce. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised

Speed. 'Item, She is too liberal.'

Launce. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of of her purse she shall not, for that I'll keep shut. now, of another thing she may, and that I cannot help. Well, proceed

Speed. 'Item, She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.'

Launce. Stop there I'll have her she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article: rehearse that once more.

Speed. 'Item, She hath more hair than wit'—

Launce. More hair than wit: it may be I'll prove it The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less .What's next?

Speed.—'And more faults than hairs'—

Launce. That's monstrous: O, that that were out!

Speed.—'And more wealth than faults'

Launce. Why, that word makes the faults gracious . Well, I'll have her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible—

Speed. What then?

Launce Why, then will I tell thee—that thy master stays for thee at the North-gate.

Speed. For me!

Launce. For thee? ay, who art thou? he hath stayed for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Launce. Thou must run to him; for thou hast stayed so long, that going will scarce serve the turn

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? 'pox of your love-letters! [he runs off]

Launce. Now will he be swunged for reading my letter .. An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction. [he follows]

[3 2.] Milan a room in the Duke's palace

The DUKE. THURIO

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you, Now Valentine is banished from her sight.

Thurio. Since his exile she hath despised me most, Forsworn my company and railed at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenchéd in ice, which with an hour's heat Dissolves to water and doth lose his form.

A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot. ..

PROTEUS enters

How now, Sir Proteus! Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?

Proteus. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously!

Proteus. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so...

Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee—

For thou hast shown some sign of good desert—

Makes me the better to confer with thee

Proteus [bows]. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace .

Let me not live to look upon your grace

Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect
The match between Sir Thurio and my daughter?

Proteus. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes her against my will?

Proteus. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she persévers so
What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love Sir Thurio?

Proteus. The best way is to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent:
Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think that it is spoke in hate.

Proteus. Ay, if his enemy deliver it ...

Therefore it must with circumstance be spoken
By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then you must undertake to slander him.

Proteus. And that, my lord, I shall be loath to do...
'Tis an ill office for a gentleman,
Especially against his very friend.

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him,
Therefore the office is indifferent,
Being entreated to it by your friend

Proteus. You have prevailed, my lord. If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.
†But say this weed her love from Valentine,
It follows not that she will love Sir Thurio.

Thurio. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him—
Lest it should ravel and be good to none—
You must provide to bottom it on me:
Which must be done, by praising me as much
As you in worth dispraise Sir Valentine.

Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this kind,
Because we know, on Valentine's report,
You are already Love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind....
Upon this warrant, shall you have access
Where you with Silvia may confer at large .
For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy,
And—for your friend's sake—will be glad of you,
Where you may temper her, by your persuasion,
To hate young Valentine and love my friend.

Proteus. As much as I can do, I will effect...
But you, Sir Thurio, are not sharp enough:
You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composéd rhymes
Should be full-fraught with serviceable vows.

Duke. Ay,
Much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Proteus. Say that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart:
Write till your ink be dry: and with your tears
Moist it again: and frame some feeling line
That may discover such integrity
For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews—
Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones;
Make tigers tame and huge leviathans
Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands....
After your dire-lamenting elegies,
Visit by night your lady's chamber-window
With some sweet consort; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet-complaining grievance...
This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love.

Thurio. And thy advice, this night, I'll put in practice:
Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the city presently
To sort some gentlemen well skilled in music ...
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn
To give the onset to thy good advice.

Duke About it, gentlemen [he turns to go]

Proteus [following] We'll wait upon your grace till after supper,

And afterward determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it I will pardon you.

[The Duke goes in to supper, Proteus and Thurio leave the palace]

[4 I.] A highway running through a forest

Three outlaws, bearing bows and arrows, keep watch from a thicket VALENTINE and SPEED are seen approaching

1 Outlaw. Fellows, stand fast I see a passenger.

2 Outlaw. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

They step forth and cover them with their bows

3 Outlaw. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about ye....

If not...we'll make you sit, and rifle you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone, these are the villains That all the travellers do fear so much.

Valentine [calm]. My friends—

1 Outlaw. That's not so, sir: we are your enemies.

2 Outlaw. Peace ..we'll hear him.

3 Outlaw. Ay, by my beard, will we for he's a proper man.

Valentine. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose; A man I am crossed with adversity: My riches are these poor habiliments, Of which if you should here disfurnish me, You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Outlaw. Whither travel you?

Valentine. To Verona.

1 Outlaw. Whence came you?

Valentine. From Milan.

3 Outlaw. Have you long sojourned there?

Valentine. Some sixteen months, and longer might have stayed,

If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

1 Outlaw. What, were you banished thence?

Valentine. I was

2 Outlaw. For what offence?

Valentine. For that which now torments me to rehearse,
I killed a man, whose death I much repent.
But yet I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1 Outlaw. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so;
But were you banished for so small a fault?

Valentine. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

1 Outlaw. Have you the tongues?

Valentine. My youthful travel therein made me happy;
Or else I often had been miserable

3 Outlaw. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar,
This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1 Outlaw. We'll have him Sirs, a word [they talk apart
Speed. Master, be one of them
It's an honourable kind of thievery

Valentine. Peace, villain

2 Outlaw. Tell us this. have you any thing to take to?

Valentine. Nothing but my fortune.

3 Outlaw. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of ungoverned youth
Thrust from the company of awful men. .

Myself was from Verona banished,
For practising to steal away a lady,
†An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

2 Outlaw. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stabbed unto the heart.

1 Outlaw. And I, for such like petty crimes as these . .
But to the purpose for we cite our faults,
That they may hold excused our lawless lives;
And partly, seeing you are beautified
With goodly shape, and by your own report
A linguist, and a man of such perfection
As we do in our quality much want—

2 Outlaw. Indeed, because you are a banished man,

Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:

Are you content to be our general?

To make a virtue of necessity,

And live as we do in this wilderness?

3 Outlaw. What sayst thou? wilt thou be of our consórt?
Say 'ay,' and be the captain of us all.

We'll do thee homage and be ruled by thee,

Love thee as our commander and our king.

1 Outlaw. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest.

2 Outlaw. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offered.

Valentine. I take your offer, and will live with you,
Provided that you do no outrages

On silly women or poor passengers.

3 Outlaw. No, we detest such vile base practices...

Come, go with us, we'll bring thee to our crew,

And show thee all the treasure we have got;

Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

[they turn into the forest]

[4 2] A wall, with a postern, behind the Duke's palace· inside a strip of garden dividing the wall from a lofty turret, outside, a narrow lane with bushes a moonlit night

PROTEUS opens the postern and enters the garden

Proteus. Already have I been false to Valentine,

And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.

Under the colour of commending him,

I have access my own love to prefer . .

But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,

To be corrupted with my worthless gifts;

When I protest true loyalty to her,

She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;

When to her beauty I commend my vows,

She bids me think how I have been forsworn
In breaking faith with Julia whom I loved;
And notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope ..
Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still;

THURIO and the musicians come up the lane

But here comes Thurio; now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Thurio [enters the garden]. How now, Sir Proteus, are you crept before us?

Proteus. Ay, gentle Thurio, for you know that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Thurio. Ay, but I hope, sir, that you love not here

Proteus. Sir, but I do or else I would be hence.

Thurio. Who? Silvia?

Proteus. Ay, Silvia—for your sake.

Thurio. I thank you for your own Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily awhile.

*The musicians stand beneath a balcony of the turret an old
Host and JULIA, disguised as a boy, appear in the lane*

Host Now, my young guest, methinks you're allicholy;
I pray you, why is it?

Julia. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.

Host. Come, we'll have you merry. I'll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentleman that you asked for. [they approach the postern]

Julia. But shall I hear him speak?

Host Ay, that you shall.

Julia. That will be music. [the musicians strike up]

Host. Hark! hark!

Julia. Is he among these?

Host. Ay· but peace, let's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admiréd be
Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness:
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness·
And, being helped, inhabits there
Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing,
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now¹ are you sadder than you were before?
How do you, man? the music likes you not

Julia. You mistake· the musician likes me not.

Host. Why, my pretty youth?

Julia. He plays false, father.

Host. How? out of tune on the strings?

Julia. Not so: but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings

Host. You have a quick ear.

Julia. Ay, I wou'd I were deaf ..it makes me have a slow heart

Host. I perceive you delight not in music

Julia. Not a whit, when it jars so. [the music begins afresh]

Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!

Julia. Ay: that change is the spite.

Host. You would have them always play but one thing

Julia. I would always have one play but one thing....
But, host, doth this Sir Proteus that we talk on Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me—he loved her out of all nick

Julia. Where is Launce?

Host. Gone to seek his dog, which to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Julia. Peace, stand aside, the company parts

[they crouch behind a bush]

Proteus [at the postern] Sir Thurio, fear not you I will so plead,

That you shall say my cunning drift excels.

Thurio Where meet we?

Proteus. At Saint Gregory's well

Thurio. Farewell.

[Thurio and the musicians go off down the lane]

A window opens in the turret, SILVIA appears on the balcony

Proteus. Madam· good even to your ladyship

Silvia. I thank you for your music, gentlemen
Who is that that spake?

Proteus. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Silvia. Sir Proteus, as I take it

Proteus. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant

Silvia. What is your will?

Proteus That I may compass yours.

Silvia. You have your wish my will is even this—
That presently you hie you home to bed .

Thou subtle, perjured, false, disloyal man!

Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery,

That hast deceived so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends:
For me—by this pale queen of night I swear!
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit;
And by and by intend to chide myself
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Proteus. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady—
But she is dead.

Julia. 'Twere false, if I should speak it;
For I am sure she is not buried.

Silvia. Say that she be yet Valentine thy friend
Survives; to whom—thyself art witness—
I am betrothed; and art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunity?

Proteus. I likewise hear that Valentine is dead.

Silvia. And so suppose am I, for in his grave
Assure thyself my love is buried.

Proteus. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.

Silvia. Go to thy lady's grave and call her's thence
Or, at the least, in her's sepulchre thine

Julia. He heard not that.

Proteus. Madam...if your heart be so obdurate...
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber.
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep
For since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow—will I make true love

Julia. If 'twere a substance, you would, sure, deceive it,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Silvia. I am very loath to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadows and adore false shapes,

Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it:
And so, good rest. [she shuts her window]

Proteus. As wretches have o'ernight
That wait for execution in the morn.

[he closes the postern and passes down the lane]

Julia Host, will you go?

Host. By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

Julia. Pray you, where lies Sir Proteus?

Host. Marry, at my house .Trust me, I think 'tis almost day.

Julia. Not so: but it hath been the longest night,
That e'er I watched, and the most heaviest. [they go]

[4 3] *EGLAMOUR comes down the lane and halts
by the postern*

Eglamour 'This is the hour that Madam Silvia
Entreated me to call and know her mind
There's some great matter she'd employ me in. . .
Madam, madam! [calling]

The window opens and SILVIA appears once more

Silvia. Who calls?

Eglamour Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command

Silvia. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good morrow

Eglamour. As many, worthy lady, to yourself .
According to your ladyship's impose,
I am thus early come to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in Silvia. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman —

Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not—Valiant, wise, remorseful, well-accomplished.
Thou art not ignorant what dear good will
I bear unto the banished Valentine .
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thurio—whom my very soul abhors ..

Thyself hast loved, and I have heard thee say
 No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
 As when thy lady and thy true love died,
 Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity
 Sir Eglamour I would to Valentine,
 To Mantua, where I hear he makes abode;
 And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
 I do desire thy worthy company,
 Upon whose faith and honour I repose....
 Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
 But think upon my grief—a lady's grief—
 And on the justice of my flying hence,
 To keep me from a most unholy match,
 Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues....
 I do desire thee, even from a heart
 As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
 To bear me company, and go with me:
 If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
 That I may venture to depart alone.

Eglamour. Madam, I pity much your grievances,
 Which since I know they virtuously are placed,
 I give consent to go along with you,
 Recking as little what betideth me,
 As much I wish all good befortune you .
 When will you go?

Silvia. This evening coming.

Eglamour. Where shall I meet you?

Silvia. At Friar Patrick's cell,
 Where I intend holy confession.

Eglamour. I will not fail your ladyship: good morrow, gentle lady. [he returns up the lane]

Silvia. Good morrow, kind Sir Eglamour
 [she closes her window]

Six or seven hours pass

[4. 4.] LAUNCE, with his dog at his heels, comes forth from the postern, and casts himself under a bush, groaning

Launce [to the dog]. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him—look you—it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it: I have taught him—even as one would say precisely, 'Thus I would teach a dog.' I was sent to deliver him, as a present to Mistress Silvia from my master; and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber, but he steps me to her trencher, and steals her capon's leg...O, 'tis a foul thing, when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies: I would have—as one should say—one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things.... If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for't: sure as I live, he had suffered for't: you shall judge... He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemen-like dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there (bless the mark!) a pissing-while, but all the chamber smelt him .. 'Out with the dog,' says one—'What cur is that?' says another—'Whip him out,' says the third—'Hang him up,' says the duke ...I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs. 'Friend,' quoth I, 'you mean to whip the dog?' 'Ay, marry, do I,' quoth he. 'You do him the more wrong,' quoth I, 'twas I did the thing you wot of': he makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for his servant? Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stol'n, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for geese

he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't...Thou think'st not of this now. .Nay, I remember the trick you served me, when I took my leave of Madam Silvia: did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? when didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's farthingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

PROTEUS and JULIA (disguised as a boy) pass by Proteus. Sebastian is thy name; I like thee well,

And will employ thee in some service presently

Julia. In what you please. I will do what I can.

Proteus. I hope thou wilt. [he spies Launce] How now, you whoreson peasant!

Where have you been these two days loitering?

Launce. Marry, sir, I carried Mistress Silvia the dog you bade me.

Proteus. And what says she to my little Jewel?

Launce. Marry, she says your dog was a cur, and tells you currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Proteus. But she received my dog?

Launce. No, indeed, she did not: here have I brought him back again.

Proteus. What! didst thou offer her this from me?

Launce. Ay sir, the other squirrel was stol'n from me by the hangman boys in the market-place, and then I offered her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Proteus. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again,
Or ne'er return again into my sight....

Away, I say. .stayest thou to vex me here?

A slave, that still an-end turns me to shame...

[Launce goes, with Crab behind him]

Sebastian, I have entertained thee,

Partly that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business...
For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish lout...
But chiefly for thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my augury deceive me not,
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee....
Go presently, and take this ring with thee,
Deliver it to Madam Silvia .

She loved me well delivered it to me.

Julia. †It seems you loved not her, nor love her token...
[taking the ring]

She is dead, belike?

Proteus. Not so ..I think she lives.

Julia. Alas!

Proteus. Why dost thou cry 'alas'?

Julia. I cannot choose but pity her.

Proteus. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?

Julia. Because, methinks, that she loved you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia ..

She dreams on him that has forgot her love—
You dote on her that cares not for your love....

'Tis pity love should be so contrary:

And thinking on it makes me cry, 'alas!'

Proteus. Well give her that ring, and therewithal
This letter [points] That's her chamber. .Tell my lady
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture:
Your message done, hie home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad—and solitary. [he goes]

Julia. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus, thou hast entertained
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs;
Alas, poor fool, why do I pity him
That with his very heart despiseth me?

Because he loves her, he despiseth me—
Because I love him, I must pity him....
This ring I gave him, when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will
And now am I—unhappy messenger!—
To plead for that, which I would not obtain;
To carry that, which I would have refused,
To praise his faith, which I would have dispraised ..
I am my master's true confirmed love,
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself ..
Yet will I woo for him, but yet so coldly,
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed ...

SILVIA comes from the postern

Gentlewoman, good day. I pray you be my mean
To bring me where to speak with Madam Silvia.

Silvia. What would you with her, if that I be she?

Julia. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on Silvia. From whom?

Julia. From my master, Sir Proteus, madam.

Silvia. O...he sends you for a picture?

Julia. Ay, madam.

Silvia [calling] Ursula, bring my picture there.

[the maid brings the picture]

Go give your master this: tell him from me,
One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget,
Would better fit his chamber than this shadow

Julia. Madam, please you peruse this letter .
Pardon me, madam, I have unadvised
Delivered you a paper that I should not...

[she takes it back in haste and gives another]
This is the letter to your ladyship.

Silvia. I pray thee, let me look on that again.

Julia It may not be good madam, pardon me.

Silvia. There, hold...

[she tears the letter across and returns it]

I will not look upon your master's lines:

I know they are stuffed with protestations,

And full of new-found oaths, which he will break

As easily as I do tear his paper.

Julia. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

Silvia. The more shame for him, that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say a thousand times
His Julia gave it him at his departure.

Though his false finger hath profaned the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.

Julia. She thanks you.

Silvia. What sayst thou?

Julia. I thank you, madam, that you tender her:
Poor gentlewoman, my master wrongs her much.

Silvia. Dost thou know her?

Julia Almost as well as I do know myself
To think upon her woes, I do protest
That I have wept a hundred several times.

Silvia. Belike she thinks that Proteus hath forsook her?

Julia. I think she doth and that's her cause of sorrow

Silvia Is she not passing fair?

Julia She hath been fairer, madam, than she is,
When she did think my master loved her well,
She, in my judgement, was as fair as you ..
But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starved the roses in her cheeks,
And pinched the lily-tincture of her face,
That now she is become as black as I.

Silvia. How tall was she?

Julia. About my stature: for, at Pentecost,
When all our pageants of delight were played,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimmed in Madam Julia's gown,
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgement,
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore, I know she is about my height.
And at that time I made her weep agood,
For I did play a lamentable part....

Madam, 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my tears ..
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly...and, would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow.

Silvia. She is beholding to thee, gentle youth.
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words .
Here, youth: there is my purse, I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'st her.
Farewell

Julia And she shall thank you for't, if e'er you know her. .. [Silvia goes]

A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful....
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much....
Alas, how love can trifle with itself.
Here is her picture.. [she sits] Let me see. I think
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the painter flattered her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much ...
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,

I'll get me such a coloured periwig.
 Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine:
 Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high:
 What should it be that he respects in her,
 But I can make respective in myself,
 If this fond Love were not a blinded god? [she rises
 Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
 For 'tis thy rival: O thou senseless form,
 Thou shalt be worshipped, kissed, loved, and adored;
 And, were there sense in his idolatry,
 My substance should be statue in thy stead. .
 I'll use thee kindly, for thy mistress' sake
 That used me so or else, by Jove I vow,
 I should have scratched out your unseeing eyes,
 To make my master out of love with thee.

[she bears away the picture

[5. 1.] An abbey near Milan evening

EGLAMOUR cloaked and spurred, awaits Silvia

Eglamour. The sun begins to gild the western sky,
 And now it is about the very hour
 That Silvia, at Friar Patrick's cell, should meet me.
 She will not fail; for lovers break not hours,
 Unless it be to come before their time—
 So much they spur their expedition ..

SILVIA approaches in haste

See, where she comes .Lady, a happy evening!

Silvia. Amen, amen go on, good Eglamour,
 Out at the postern by the abbey-wall;
 I fear I am attended by some spies.

Eglamour. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off.
 If we recover that, we are sure enough. [they quit the abbey

[5.2] Milan: a room in the Duke's palace

THURIO: PROTEUS, with JULIA (as SEBASTIAN) in attendance

Thurio. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?

Proteus. O sir, I find her milder than she was,
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thurio. What?—that my leg is too long?

Proteus. No, that it is too little.

Thurio. I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder.

(Julia. But love will not be spurred to what it loathes.

Thurio. What says she to my face?

Proteus. She says it is a fair one

Thurio. Nay then the wanton lies: my face is black.

Proteus. But pearls are fair; and the old saying is,
Black men are pearls in beauteous ladies' eyes.

(Julia. 'Tis true, such pearls as put out ladies' eyes,
For I had rather wink than look on them

Thurio. How likes she my discourse?

Proteus. Ill, when you talk of war.

Thurio. But well, when I discourse of love and peace.

(Julia. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

Thurio. What says she to my valour?

Proteus. O sir, she makes no doubt of that.

(Julia. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

Thurio. What says she to my birth?

Proteus. That you are well derived.

(Julia. True: from a gentleman to a fool.

Thurio. Considers she my possessions?

Proteus. O, ay: and pities them.

Thurio. Wherefore?

(Julia. That such an ass should owe them.

Proteus. That they are out by lease.

Julia. Here comes the duke.

The DUKE enters, in haste

Duke. How now, Sir Proteus! how now, Thurio!
Which of you saw Sir Eglamour of late?

Thurio. Not I.

Proteus. Nor I.

Duke. Saw you my daughter?

Proteus. Neither.

Duke. Why then,
She's fled unto that peasant Valentine;
And Eglamour is in her company.
Tis true ..for Friar Laurence met them both,
As he in penance wandered through the forest:
Him he knew well · and guessed that it was she,
But, being masked, he was not sure of it....
Besides, she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this even—and there she was not....
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence;
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently, and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot
That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled:
Dispatch—sweet gentlemen!—and follow me.

[he hurries out]

Thurio. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That flies her fortune when it follows her:
I'll after; more to be revenged on Eglamour
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [he follows the Duke]

Proteus. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love
Than hate of Eglamour that goes with her.

[he follows Thurio]

Julia. And I will follow, more to cross that love
Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love.

[she follows Proteus]

[5.3.] The highway in the forest

SILVIA, in the hands of the Outlaws

1 Outlaw. Come, come, be patient. we must bring you to our captain.

Silvia. A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learned me how to brook this patiently.

2 Outlaw. Come, bring her away.

1 Outlaw. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

3 Outlaw. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us.
But Moses and Valerius follow him:

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,
There is our captain. we'll follow him that's fled—
The thicket is beset, he cannot 'scape.

1 Outlaw. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave....

Fear not · he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly

Silvia. O Valentine...this I endure for thee.

[5.4.] They pass into the wood VALENTINE comes slowly along the highway

Valentine. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns:
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses and record my woes ...
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was.
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia:
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain....

He muses: cries and the sound of blows are heard

What halloing and what stir is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase;
They love me well: yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages. .
Withdraw thee, Valentine; who's this comes here?

*He withdraws: SILVIA, in disarray, comes from the wood,
PROTEUS and JULIA (as SEBASTIAN) following*

Proteus. Madam, this service I have done for you—
Though you respect not aught your servant doth—
To hazard life and rescue you from him
That would have forced your honour and your love.
Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look.
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give (Valentine. How like a dream is this! I see—and hear. .

Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile

Silvia. O miserable, unhappy that I am!

Proteus. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came:
But, by my coming, I have made you happy.

Silvia. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.

(Julia. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

Silvia. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me:
O, heaven be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul—
And full as much (for more there cannot be!)
I do detest false perjured Proteus...
Therefore be gone, solicit me no more.

Proteus. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look?

O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approved,
When women cannot love where they're beloved.

Silvia. When Proteus cannot love where he's beloved...

Read over Julia's heart—thy first best love—

†For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith

Into a thousand oaths, and, all those oaths

Descended into perjury—to love me.

Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou'dst two,

And that's far worse than none better have none

Than plural faith, which is too much by one ..

Thou counterfeit, to thy true friend!

Proteus.

In love,

Who respects friend?

Silvia.

All men but Proteus

Proteus. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form ..

I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end,

And love you 'gainst the nature of love. .force ye.

Silvia. O heaven!

Proteus [seizing her]

I'll force thee yield to my desire.

Valentine. Ruffian! [leaping out upon him] let go that rude uncivil touch,

Thou friend of an ill fashion!

Proteus [falling back].

Valentine!

Valentine. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love—

For such is a friend now: treacherous man,

Thou hast beguiled my hopes; nought but mine eye

Could have persuaded me: now I dare not say

I have one friend alive; thou wouldst disprove me...

†Who should be trusted, when one's own right hand

Is perjured to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deepest. O time, most accurst ..
'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst!

Proteus. My shame and guilt confounds me...
Forgive me, Valentine. if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender't here, I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.

Valentine. Then I am paid:
And once again I do receive thee honest;
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven nor earth; for these are pleased
By penitence th'Eternal's wrath's appeased. .
And that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee

Julia. O me, unhappy! [she swoons]

Proteus. Look to the boy.

Valentine. Why, boy!
Why wag! how now? what's the matter? Look up: speak.
Julia. O good sir, my master charged me to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia .which, out of my neglect, was never done.

Proteus. Where is that ring, boy?

Julia. Here 'tis . this is it.

Proteus. How! let me see . [taking it]
Why this is the ring I gave to Julia.

Julia. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [she proffers another ring]

Proteus. But how cam'st thou by this ring? at my depart
I gave this unto Julia.

Julia. And Julia herself did give it me—
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.

Proteus. How! Julia!

Julia. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertained 'em deeply in her heart....

How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root!

O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush....

Be thou ashamed that I have took upon me

Such an immodest raiment, if shame live

In a disguise of love!

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,

Women to change their shapes than men their minds.

Proteus. Than men their minds? 'tis true...O heaven, were man

But constant, he were perfect; that one error

Fills him with faults .makes him run through all th'sins,

Inconstancy falls off ere it begins.

What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy

More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?

Valentine. Come, come: a hand from either:

[he joins their hands]

Let me be blest to make this happy close:

'Twere pity two such friends should be long foes.

Proteus. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever

Julia. And I mine.

Outlaws appear, haling along the DUKE and THURIO

Outlaw. A prize. .a prize a prize!

Valentine. Forbear, forbear, I say it is my lord the duke...

Your grace is welcome to a man disgraced,

Banishéd Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thurio. Yonder is Silvia: and Silvia's mine.

[he makes towards her]

Valentine. Thurio give back; or else embrace thy death:
Come not within the measure of my wrath:

Do not name Silvia thine: if once again,
Verona shall not hold thee...Here she stands,
Take but possession of her—with a touch...
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love!

Thurio. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I:
I hold him but a fool that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions....

[he turns from him]

Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love:
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrivalled merit,
To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well derived.
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserved her.

Valentine. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy:

I now beseech you—for your daughter's sake—
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it—for thine own—whate'er it be.

Valentine. These banished men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recalled from their exile:
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevailed, I pardon them and the Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts ..

Come, let us go. We will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Valentine. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile....
What think you of this page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him—he blushes.

Valentine I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying?

Valentine. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortunéd:
Come Proteus, 'tis your penance but to hear
The story of your loves discoveréd .
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours—
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness

They pass out of sight along the highway

THE COPY FOR THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, 1623

There is no Quarto for The Two Gentlemen and the play probably first saw the light of print in the First Folio. The most striking bibliographical features of this text, features which it shares with The Merry Wives, its successor in the Folio, are the complete absence of stage-directions and the almost complete absence of entries and exits for characters, except at the beginning or end of the scenes. Despite the claim in the Folio sub-title that the plays of that volume were 'truely set forth, according to their first originall,' it is hardly possible that a text in this condition can have been printed from theatrical prompt-copy, still less from the author's manuscript. No company could have acted the play as it stands. Yet it is not difficult to see how such a text could have been made up for a printer.

For stage-performances in Shakespeare's day three sorts of manuscript material were necessary. First, there was the prompt-copy, which contained at least the bare minimum of stage-directions together with precise indications for the entry of characters and generally, though being less important not so invariably, the indications for exit. Second, there were the players' parts, which were transcribed from the prompt-copy, with the cues, and handed out to the actors for the memorising of their lines. Third, there was the 'plot' or 'plat' of the play, a foolscap sheet (often pasted on to a board so that it could be hung up at a convenient place behind the scenes) on which were written the names of the characters appearing in each scene and of the actors playing them, in the order in which they were to come on. On this sheet the scene-divisions were marked by lines ruled across it, while occasionally act-divisions were also indicated in similar fashion. It is important to remember that these scene-divisions were theatrical and not literary in character, that is to say they occurred when one group of players left the stage to make room for another, even when the action was continuous and the mise en scène unaltered. In a word the rules across the 'plot' were exeunt omnes lines. We believe that the 'copy' for The Two Gentlemen was made up by stringing together players' parts and arranging them in acts and scenes by the aid of a 'plot.'

This hypothesis at any rate explains many peculiarities of the Folio text. It explains, for example, the absence of stage-directions, and the paucity of the exits and entries. The latter feature is particularly instructive. The only exits found are those at the end of the scenes and at four other places where it would be obvious to a compositor or copyist of average intelligence that the context demands one. The entries are even more extraordinary. In fact there are no proper entries at all, merely lists at the head of each scene of the characters to appear in it, in the order of their appearance. Thus 2. 4. is headed 'Enter Valentine, Siluia, Speed, Duke, Protheus,' although the Duke does not enter until l. 46 or Proteus until l. 97. Now these lists of characters, arranged in the order of entry, correspond very closely with the lists found in the extant 'plots' of the period, except of course that the players' names are omitted. If we suppose that the prompt-copy of The Two Gentlemen was lost, that Heminge and Condell supplied Jaggard instead with the players' parts and the 'plot,' and that a scribe was employed to make up copy for the compositors from these materials, the result would be just such a text as now stands second in the Folio.

Editors have uniformly remarked upon the comparative straightforwardness of this text, by which presumably they mean that it is freer than most from 'misprints,' incorrect verse-lining and similar phenomena; and they have sometimes argued from this that the printer's copy was probably author's manuscript. We draw the opposite conclusion. In players' parts the irregularities and obscurities of the prompt-copy would be smoothed out, and a text derived therefrom would be virtually a clean copy. Where words were illegible, the players could refer to the author for light or, failing that, substitute makeshifts of their own in order to give sense. Textual difficulties might be safely left alone in the prompt-copy, but in the 'parts' they were bound to be tackled, since intelligibility is the first requisite of stage-performance. Doubtless the comparative simplicity of the language in this early play is one cause of its freedom from verbal cruxes, as Malone pointed out. The main cause, however, we suggest, is that it was printed from a transcript in which most of the puzzles which prompt-copy would have set a compositor had been solved or eliminated. Nevertheless, though a transcript from players' parts might be free from ambiguities, it by no means follows that it would be free from corruption. Actors, for instance, are prone to 'gag,' and we shall draw attention in our notes to certain passages which may have suffered from this cause

But 'gag' is not the worst. There can be little doubt that the text, as a whole, whether in the original prompt-copy or in the process of making-out the players' parts, has been hacked about and drastically abridged in order to meet the requirements of a particular performance or company. In the nature of the case the bibliographical evidence for this is slight, but the literary evidence is so strong as to be overwhelming. The details will be brought out in the notes. A glance at two passages is enough to establish a prima facie case here:—

- (i) 2. 4. 194-6, which the F. prints:

It is mine. or Valentines praise?

Her true perfection, or my false transgression?

That makes me reasonlesse, to reason thus?

The first line is hopeless. Most editors read 'Is it' for 'It is' and bolder spirits, like Theobald, rewrite the line as

 Is it mine eye or Valentino's praise

But the F. period, 'It is' and the absolutely unmetrical character of the line as it stands render legitimate emendation impossible. We are, therefore, forced to conclude that the text has been tampered with at this point, in order to shorten the soliloquy. Other instances of 'cutting' scarcely less glaring are to be found at 3. 2. 75-8 and 4. 1. 55-8.

(ii) 5. 4. 88-90, which the F. prints as prose, thus:

Iul. O good fir, my mafter charg'd me to deluier a ring to Madam Siluia w̃ (out of my neglect) was neuer done.

The occurrence of an isolated prose speech in the middle of a verse scene raises suspicions. But suspicion becomes certainty when it is observed that is a line of verse. In other words, the adapter has here tampered with the text, using, however, a scrap of Shakespeare's original to help patch the rent.

Which, out of my neglect, was never done

The presence of the adapter's hand serves to explain most if not all the dramatic anomalies, and they are many, in this strange text. A brief enquiry into how he worked will summarise the conclusions scattered throughout the notes. Scenes are curtailed. In 2. 2. and 5. 3., for example, we are presented with what are apparently nothing but the conclusions of longer scenes in the original, the adapter attempting to conceal his traces by writing a few lines of prose as an introduction. Whole scenes are omitted. This explains the confusion of time-sequence, which is a noticeable feature of the transmitted text. The 'time,' for instance, of 3. 1. is ridiculous as it stands, but imagine an interval-scene between ll. 187 and 188, and all would be well. Similarly, an interval-scene is needed between 4. 3. and 4. 4. A somewhat different example of the same kind of thing is found in 4. 4. where Julia is one moment at the foot of Silvia's tower and the next in her chamber (v. note 4. 4. 105). It is to be suspected, moreover, that portions of two or more original scenes have been woven together in the manufacture of the infamous finale (v. head-note 5. 4). In work like this an adapter will naturally have to write a number of link-passages of his own; sometimes these are in prose, sometimes in verse—or what passes as such. Again, drastic abridgment is bound to affect character. Julia's father (v. note 1. 2. 131) probably appeared in the original, while we can be certain that Sir Eglamour's conduct in the forest was different (v. pp. xvi–xvii), to say nothing of the conduct of Valentine and Proteus in the last scene. Finally the confusion of names, e.g. 'Panthion' for 'Panthino,' 'duke' for 'emperor,' 'Padua' for 'Milan,' etc. may be set down to the same cause (v. notes 1. 3. 1, 27; 2. 5. 1)

The normal length of a play for the London stage in Elizabethan days was about 3000 lines; the received text of The Two Gentlemen contains some 2380 lines. After what has just been said it should not be difficult to believe that at least 600 lines of the original have disappeared. Did the adapter cut still deeper than this in order to make room for lengthy additions of his own? It is impossible to answer positively, but we have strong suspicions that he did. Adaptation for a particular company might carry with it alterations to fit a new cast. Now there are two clowns in this text, and the difference in their quality is striking, to say the least of it. Launce is humorous, in the true Shakespearian manner, and his sallies, some of which we have been able to restore, bite almost every time. But Speed is a poor stick, without character, and he has not a single witty thing to say from beginning to end. In short, we think that Speed may be the creation or re-creation of the adapter (cf. notes 1. 1. 92; 2. 1. 73–4; 2. 4. 7; 2. 5. 1, 3. 1. 295; 5. 4. 1). If so, he was forgotten in 5. 4., while the 'Padua' scene (2. 5.) may be taken as a specimen of the adapter's unaided workmanship—there is nothing in it, nothing at all.

It was a pleasure to find, after these notes had been made up, that a writer in The Shakespeare League Journal (Nov. 1920) had independently, and from the acting point of view, arrived at our main conclusions. 'The piece,' she says, 'appears to have been subjected to the process known as "tightening", it is a short play and it may well be that, in order to bring it within the limits of some particular bill, it was cut down, some speeches being curtailed and others cut out altogether. This would partly, if not entirely, account for the imperfect psychology of the later scenes which makes acting so difficult, and would go far to explain the baldness of the dialogue in parts.'

D. W.

NOTES

All significant departures from the Folio, including important emendations in punctuation, are recorded, the name of the critic who first suggested a reading being placed in brackets. Illustrative spellings and misprints are quoted from the Good Quarto texts or from the Folio where no Good Quarto exists. The line-numeration for reference to plays not yet issued in this edition is that used in Bartlett's Concordance.

F., unless otherwise specified, stands for the First Folio; T.I. and Facs.=the Textual Introduction and the Facsimile of a passage from the 'Shakespearian' Addition to Sir Thomas More, both to be found in the Tempest volume; N.E.D.=The New English Dictionary; Sh. Eng.=Shakespeare's England, S.D.=Stage-direction; G = Glossary; Daniel=Time-Analysis of the plots of Shakespeare's Plays, P. A. Daniel, New Shak. Soc.

Characters in the Play. Based upon 'The names of all the Actors,' found at the end of the F. text. Variants: 'Duke of Milan' for 'Duke'; 'Proteus' for 'Protheus'; 'Antonio' for 'Anthonio'; 'Panthino' for 'Panthion' (v note 1. 3 1); 'Servants, musicians' added to the list.

Acts and Scenes. F. divides throughout, and is followed by all modern editors. But F. divisions are probably taken from the playhouse 'plot' (v. pp. 77-8 and T.I. § 3).

Punctuation. Less delicate than that found in The Tempest, as we should expect in an early play; but careful on the whole. It is not surprising to find good punctuation in a text taken, as we believe, from players' parts, since if dramatic pointing were not reproduced in the 'parts' it would be futile. We have occasionally used a semi-colon for a F. colon and vice versa.

Stage-directions. None in the F, v pp. 77-8

I. I.

22. Leander cf. 3. 1. 120. These references to Marlowe's Hero and Leander which was entered in the Stationers' Register in 1593, after the author's death, have been taken by some as proof that the play belongs to a later date. All they indicate, however, is that Shakespeare must have seen the poem in ms., a likely thing enough since there is a high probability that the two dramatists were working together at some period before 1593. For the question of date v. note 3. 1. 170-87.

43. dwells, F. 'dwels;'

54. shipped Both Valentine and Proteus proceed from Verona to Milan by ship (cf. 2. 2. 14; 2. 4. 185), which is impossible, but it is noteworthy that Valentine returns homewards by land, and that Julia clearly intends a journey on foot (2. 7. 8-10, 35). Geography was not Shakespeare's strong point, but the confusion may well have been aggravated by the abridger.

62. farewell One of the F.'s four internal 'Exits' occurs at the end of this line, v p. 78.

65. leave (Pope) F. 'loue'; an e:o error, 'leue' taken as 'loue.' v. T.I. p. xlii and cf note 4. 4. 71.

73. sheep, quibble upon 'ship.'

75. An if F. 'And if'

76. I a sheep (F2) F. 'I Sheepe'

78. my horns are his horns, etc. The point of the jest is obscure—possibly a reference to 'Little Boy Blue'

91. baa quibble upon 'bah!'

92. gav'st thou my letter to Julia? It is remarkable that Proteus should employ Valentine's servant as his go-between rather than his own man, Launce. Lucetta confirms this at 1. 2. 38. We hear nothing of Launce until he appears in 2. 3. and Proteus' words 'I must go send some better messenger' (1. 1. 147) make it possible that he first engaged Launce after Speed's departure, though Speed, in a suspect scene however (v. p. 81), welcomes Launce to 'Padua' (2. 5. 1) as an old friend and Proteus' servant. Pope placed the whole of this dialogue between Proteus and Speed in the margin as 'interpolated by the players,' and it is quite conceivable that we have here an addition by the adapter, v. p. 81 and notes 2. 1. 73-4; 2. 4. 7; 2. 5. 1, 3. 1. 295, 5. 4. 1. Lucetta's words, which occur in a verse-scene untouched by the adapter, show, however, that a 'Sir Valentine's page' figured in the original text.

95. a laced mutton i.e. a strumpet (N.E.D.). v G. It is strange that Proteus should tolerate such language from a servant in reference to his lady

108. But what said she? etc. F. 'Pro. But what said she?/Sp. I./Pro. Nod-I, why that's noddy.' If the text was made up of players' parts and their cues, the confusion is readily explained. Speed's nod, indicated no doubt in the prompt-copy, would not necessarily be in his part, while the parts alone, without the cues, would give 'Nod-I' twice over. Speed's explanation (l. 111) confirms our reading. Theobald reads 'Pro. But what said she? did she nod?/Speed [first nodding] Ay.'

119-20. nothing . noddy Note the quibble.

133-37. Sir, I could...hard as steel. We have preserved the F. arrangement, as doggerel may be intended; but ll. 139-40 are also printed as verse. It must have been difficult at times for a compositor, or copyist, to distinguish between prose and verse in players' parts, which were written on narrow slips of paper.

134. ducat i.e. about 3/6, seven times the 'testern' Proteus had just given him.

141. testerned (F2) F. 'cesternd' (1 e. cisterned!)

I. 2.

9. Sir Eglamour It is curious that Silvia also has a friend of this name, and that her praise of him (4. 3. 11-13) has points of likeness with Lucetta's depreciatory comment. Is it possible that they were the same person in the original?

12. Mercatio Perhaps a misprint for 'Mercutio.'

30. Fire A dissyllable, as frequently elsewhere in Shakespeare, cf. 2. 7. 22.

33-41. Note the versification here: seven unrhymed three-foot lines, followed by a couplet of rhyming alexandrines. F. prints ll 38-9 as one, but Shakespeare's intention was probably to adhere to the three-foot pattern.

50. That...ruminate F. reads 'Exit' at the end of this line, v. p. 78.

68. Is it (Capell) F. 'Is't'

69-70. meat...maid a quibble, 'meat' being pronounced as 'mate.' Cf MWW note 5. 5 115 and Wyld, Hist. of Mod Colloquial English, p 210.

73-4. three-foot lines.

80-97. Give me a note etc For the understanding of this dialogue and the accompanying stage-business, it is necessary to follow closely the series of quibbles upon which they turn. It will, therefore, be more convenient to explain them here than in the G :—note (i) i.e. of music, (ii) a letter in reply to Proteus; set (i) set to music, (ii) write; 84 burden (i) load, (ii) refrain, 86 I cannot reach so high (i) it is beyond the compass of my voice, (ii) he is of too high a rank for me; 88, 89 tune (i) correct pitch, (ii) temper, mood, humour; 91, 93 sharp, flat obvious quibbles, denoting a pinch and a slap; 94 descant i.e. variations; 95 mean (i) tenor (possibly Proteus is meant), (ii) Lucetta's 'moan' (cf. M.N.D. 5. 1. 330); 96 bass, with a quibble upon 'base,' i.e. low conduct; 97 bid the base a phrase from the game of prisoner's base, meaning that one of the players challenges the players on the opposite side to pursue him; thus leaving the prisoner at the base free to escape. Proteus is the 'prisoner'; Lucetta 'bids the base' by challenging Julia to pursue her.

82. the tune of 'Light o' love' Cf. Ado 3. 4. 38 "Light o' love," that goes without a burden'

91-3. three-foot lines; cf ll 33-41.

96. your unruly F. 'you vnruely'

98. babble possibly for 'bauble'; both 'babble' and 'bauble' could be spelt 'bale' in the 16th century.

106. injurious wasps i.e. her fingers.

121. fearful-hanging (Delius) F. 'fearfull, hanging'

130. Madam Printed with l. 131 in F. Possibly actor's 'gag,' v. p. 79.

131. your father This and 1. 3. 48 are the sole references to Julia's father in the received text. At 2. 7. 86-7 Julia appears to be an orphan. The death of a father would add pathos to her figure; his character and the reference to his decease, which perhaps occurred in 2 2., have, probably, been 'cut' by the abridger.

137. month's a dissyllable; probably spelt 'moneths' in the original. F. gives 'moneths' at 4. 1. 21.

I. 3.

1. Panthino F. gives two forms of this name. We get 'Panthion' in 'The names of all the Actors' and in the scene-headings of 2. 2. and 2. 3. 'Panthino' occurs in the scene-heading of 1. 3, probably because it is so spelt in the opening line of the scene. The name appears again in 1 3. 76, where it is misprinted 'Panthmo' which proves that 'Panthino' was the reading of the 'copy' at that point. In short, the evidence suggests that 'Panthino' was the spelling of Antonio's 'part,' while 'Panthion' was that of the 'plot' material (v. pp. 77-8). We have followed Capell, and printed it 'Panthino' throughout.

2. my brother Another mysterious character, who possibly figured in the original.

7. out: F. 'out.'

24. whither F. 'whether'; a Shakespearian spelling, also found at 3. 1. 51 and frequent elsewhere.

27. the emperor The reigning monarch of Milan is five times called 'emperor' in this scene (cf. ll. 38, 41, 58, 67); Launce refers to 'the Imperial's court' at 2. 3. 4; and he appears to speak of himself as 'emperor' at 2. 4. 75 and of his daughter as 'empress' in the previous line and again at 5. 4. 142. On the other hand, he is styled 'Duke' in 'The names of all the Actors,' in all scene-headings and prefixes, but only three times in the text itself, viz twice in Launce's prose speech (4. 4. 17, 21) and once in a line of 'verse' (5. 4. 123), which lies under strong suspicion of having been garbled and, in any event, occurs in a scene which had suffered severely from the adapter's hand. This being so, and seeing that 'Duke' is the sole title employed in the 'plot' material, we conclude that 'emperor' was the Shakespearian style, 'Duke' that of the theatre and the abridger. 'Shakespeare has been guilty of no mistake in placing the emperor's court at Milan. Several of the first German emperors held their courts there occasionally' (Steevens)

28. short line.

30. tournaments, F. 'Turnaments;'

45-50. The broken lines at the beginning and end of this speech suggest abridgment. As F. repeats Pro. before l. 51, the 'cut' may have involved comments by Antonio and Panthino also, though the repetition was perhaps only due to the copyist inadvertently transcribing Antonio's cue.

84 resembleth To be pronounced as a quadrisyllable (Theobald). With 84-7 cf. Son. 33.

88. father F. 'Fathers.'

2. I.

3. but one a quibble upon 'on'; the two words were commonly spelt alike in the 16th century.

19. malcontent F. 'Male-content,' which most edd. follow; but to retain the old form confuses by suggesting a quibble which was not intended.

relish a love-song v G. 'relish.'

26. one of the lions 'If Shakespeare had not been thinking of the lions in the Tower, he would have written "like a lion"' (Ritson). But possibly the player pointed to the lions on a royal standard displayed in the theatre.

32. without ye v. note 4. I. 3.

35. none else would This has puzzled many. Johnson suggested 'be so simple' understood.

73-4. to put on your hose Many conjectures, none satisfactory, e.g. 'put on your shoes,' 'beyond your nose,' 'put on your clothes' (cf. 'close' for 'clothes' Ham. 4. 5. 52). But Speed's jests are beyond inquiry.

75-6. Belike, boy, etc. F. prints this speech as two lines of verse, cf. note I. I. 133-37.

96. servant v. G.

128. good-morrow, servant F. prints 'Exit. Sil.' at the end of this line, v. p. 78

2 2

It is difficult not to believe that this scene was longer in the original, and that the F. only gives us a scrap from the end. Julia is an interesting character, of whom we hear too little. 'The dialogue,' it has been observed, 'will scarcely float the action and the scene is therefore difficult to play—a very un-Shakespearian quality' (Shak. League Journal, Nov. 1920). Abridgment would explain the two lines of prose at the opening of a verse-scene. Cf. note 5. 3.

6. F. divides 'Why then we'll make exchange;/Here, take you this.' Possibly owing to abridgment.

14. tide cf. note 2. 3. 35.

19. I come, I come The repetition, which ruins the line of verse, was perhaps due to actor, v. p. 79 and note 4. 3. 4.

2. 3.

7. hands, F. 'hands,'

27. a wood woman (Theobald) F. 'a would-woman.'

Theobald's emendation is accepted by all mod. edd. It makes excellent sense; 'wood'=mad, with a possible reference to the wooden shoe; but it is not without difficulties. If 'wood' stood in the original, it is not easy to see how it became altered into 'would,' since the l of 'would' was still sounded in Shakespeare's day. Pope read 'an old woman,' and it is conceivable that Shakespeare wrote 'a nould,' an appropriate form in Launce's mouth. Another possibility is 'a wold-woman,' i.e. a country-woman.

28. breath up and down Perhaps in reference to the lace of the shoe.

29-30 the moan she makes Launce, we suppose, swishes the staff through the air as he says this.

34-5. lose the tide A tide at Verona¹ cf. note 1. 51.

48. In my tail! (Hanmer) F. 'In thy Taile'; a common type of compositor's slip. For the jest cf. Shrew 2. 1. 215-20

50. S.D. he looses crab 'lose' and 'loose' were spelt alike in the 16th century.

51. the river This suggests that the journey from Verona to Milan was made by river, but anyhow the river at Verona is not tidal, cf. note 1. 1. 54

2. 4

7. S.D. he goes out We follow Clark and Glover in giving Speed an exit here since he has nothing further to say in this long scene. But no motive for the exit is provided by the text, which has perhaps been tampered with by the adapter at this point in order to give Speed an entry (v. p. 81). Note that ll. 1-46 are prose, while all that follows is in verse. There is strong evidence that the prose section was originally in verse also, inasmuch as l. 36 is an isolated blank-verse line, and printed as such in the F.

19. quote v. G.

27. live in your air The chameleon was supposed to live on air.

34. giver v. G

41-4. I know it well etc. Printed as verse in F.

47. Now beset This abrupt, and (in view of 3. I. 21-3) equivocal, remark is strongly suggestive of a 'cut.'

59. broken line.

60. I know (Hanmer) F 'I knew'

70. Come (Rowe) F. 'Comes'; compositor's grammar.

83. cite Malone reads 'cite,' i.e. incite.

97. S.D. Thurio goes out v note l. 113

106. a worthy mistress (F2) F. 'a worthy a Mistrresse'

113. S.D. Thurio returns Theobald reads 'Enter Servant,' followed by mod edd. But F gives l. 114 to Thur. Note: (i) The Duke enjoins Thurio to welcome Proteus, but Thurio takes no part in the dialogue after Proteus' entry. We, therefore, give him an exit there. (ii) He cannot have been originally intended to go out and return with the Duke's message, since Silvia, after replying to the message, turns to him and bids him come with her. If the adapter 'cut' Thurio's speeches at the entry of Proteus in order to save lines and a part (i.e. the servant's), the discrepancy in the text is explained.

128. high imperious thoughts—a difficulty Possibly 'thonges' stood for 'thoughts' in the original.

164. makes F. 'make', compositor's grammar.

170. dream This use of 'dream' (again in opposition to 'dote') recurs at 4 4. 79

176-77. The extra-metrical 'Ay, and,' taken with the broken line 176, suggest a 'cut' and slight adaptation.

188. F gives 'Exit' at the end of this line, v. p. 78.

189. I will Again suggestive of a 'cut.'

194. It is mine etc. Many attempts to emend this line, all unsatisfactory. But v. pp 79-80

197. She is fair etc. The halting rhythm of this line is suspicious.

207. her picture Edd. explain this as referring to Silvia's 'outer show' as opposed to 'her mind'; but this does not fit in with l. 209 'But when I look on her perfections.' Note: (i) Silvia's picture is, in fact, introduced at 4. 2. (ii) Proteus' two long soliloquies come very close together in the transmitted text (cf. note 2. 5 1). It seems possible, therefore, that 'picture' here originally meant a portrait and that this speech, in the unabridged version, was spoken before Proteus had actually met Silvia.

208. dazzled F. 'dazel'd.' The metre demands a trisyllable; cf. 1. 3. 84.

2. 5

1. Padua for 'Milan.' The topography of this text is as confused as everything else about it; 'Verona' is printed for 'Milan' at 3. 1. 81 and 5. 4. 130, both in verse, where 'Milan' would be unmetrical. The confusion has been laid at Shakespeare's door; but as we cannot tell what his version contained, it is safer to attribute it to the abridger. Indeed this whole scene is so empty and formless that we can only assign it to the adapter, v. p. 81. Having brought Proteus' two soliloquies together he was obliged to pen an interval-scene of some kind, v. note 2. 4 207

19. stands v. G. 'set.'

36. thou, that F. 'thou that that'

44. If thou wilt, etc. F. has no comma. F2 reads 'If thou wilt goe with me to the Alehouse, so:', which is an improvement.

49. go to the ale v. G. 'ale.'

2. 6.

1, 2. forsworn? So F. Mod. edd. omit the query and read a comma after 'Julia' and 'Silvia.' The restoration of the F. colons makes the question marks explicable. Proteus is brooding.

24. itself: F. 'it felfe,'

2. 7.

S.D. studying a map. At any rate it seems high time that somebody did.

22. fire's a dissyllable; cf. I. 2. 30.

30. pilgrimage; F. 'pilgrimage.'

32. wide (Collier) F. 'wilde.' Dyce follows Collier, and they are surely right. The 'ocean' is her 'love' where she will 'rest, as after much turmoil/A blessed soul doth in Elysium.' No epithet could be more inappropriate than 'wild.'

52. what Apparently some copies of F. read 'that' (Malone) likes So F. This form is not uncommon in Shakespeare, and is generally more euphonious than the -est termination.

63. broken line.

70. of infinite F2 'as infinite' Malone reads 'of the infinite,' quoting Ado 2. 3. 106 'past the infinite of thought.' Hudson reads 'o' the infinite.'

86-7. All that is mine etc. v. note I. 2. 131.

3. I.

1. Thurio's unnecessary entry and exit are perhaps the result of an earlier portion of this scene having been 'cut.'

27. court: F 'Court.'

42. presently, F. 'presently.'

55. broken line.

81. Verona for 'Milan.' As 'Milan' will not fit the metre, 'Verona' almost certainly was the reading of the original version; but v. note 2. 5. 1.

90-105. Note the rhyming couplets here; even 11. 92-3 are apparently intended to rhyme.

95. more: F. 'more.' 97. you: F. 'you.' 99. alone: F. 'alone.' 101. away: F. 'away.'

116. apparent v. G.

140. F. prints the verse-letter in italics, with a space above and below. It would not be in the Duke's 'part' but on a separate piece of paper from which he could read it on the stage.

141, 143, 147. flying. lying. fortune. So F.

149. should be F₂, which all mod. edd. follow here, reads 'would be.' But 'should' is more forcible.

153. Merops' son v. G.

170-87. And why not death etc. Note the strong resemblance between this speech and Rom. 3. 3. 12-70 (v pp 1x-x). The point is important; for, if Romeo's speech (Q1), which is altogether more mature than Valentine's, belongs as we believe to the years 1591-2, then The Two Gentlemen must date from a still earlier period.

173. Ah! deadly F. 'A deadly.' All edd. read 'self: a deadly'; but the F. capital, preceded by a period, makes it almost certain that 'ah!' is intended.

182. to be, F. 'to be,'

185. to fly his deadly doom i.e. by flying his (death's) doom.

192. There's not a hair etc. The point is that Launce has been coursing like a dog, in obedience to Proteus' command; 'So-ho!' being the view-halloo in coursing the hare (v. Turbervile, Booke of Hunting, 1576, p. 248). Launce then quibbles upon 'hair' (hare) and 'Valentine,' a valentine being a token of true-love. He means: 'Every hair on his head proves him to be himself—a true-love.' Valentine quibbles on his name in the same way at ll. 211, 214.

216. a proclamation The issue of the proclamation, Silvia's interview with the Duke and her committal to prison—all are supposed to have taken place during Valentine's soliloquy of 18 lines! It seems almost certain that an interval-scene originally followed the soliloquy and was cut out by the abridger. If so, the lost scene probably concerned Julia, and perhaps dealt with her arrival at the inn of the Host. Her appearance is very abrupt in 4. 2., and Proteus gives a sufficiently detailed account of the palace-scene itself.

221. banishéd F. 'banish'd'

263. but one knave. Several emendations suggested, unnecessarily. Launce is referring to the proverb, quoted by Heywood (Proverbs), 'Two false knaves need no broker.' Proteus being 'but one knave' needs his broker, i.e. Launce. v G 'broker.'

271. catalogue F. 'Cate-log,' which all mod. edd. follow as if it were a quibble. This is one example, out of many, of a Shakespearian spelling being retained and mistaken for a joke. 'Catelog' was formerly a recognised spelling (v. N.E.D.). Author's spellings are always liable to crop up in comic speeches because the compositor then follows his copy more closely than usual.

272 Inprimis We retain the F. form here and at l. 295.

279 master's ship (Theobald) F. 'Mastership'

280. your old vice still v G. 'vice'

290-91. the son of thy grandmother This jolt-head jest is unworthy of Launce.

295 Inprimis, She can milk. Speed should, of course, say 'Item' for 'Inprimis.' Much may lie behind this error, since it is just the kind of mistake a reviser would make in writing an addition. All the wit in this scene lies in Launce's comments upon the 'catalogue,' comments which he could have made without Speed's help. We think it possible, in short, that Speed's part in this scene was added by the adapter (v. p. 81).

296 Ay, that she can For the point of this and Launce's other comments, v. G. 'milk,' 'knit,' 'stock,' 'washed and scoured,' 'set the world on wheels,' 'nameless,' 'sweet mouth,' 'proud,' 'praise,' 'liberal,' 'salt.'

317 not to be — fasting F. 'not to be fasting.' We assume that in the original there was a blank after 'be' for the player to fill up at will; cf. 'et cetera' Rom. 2. 1. 38. Rowe, followed by all mod. edd., reads 'not to be kissed fasting.'

324. slip not (Collier) F. 'sleepe not'; cf. the pun 'ship'—'sheep' 1. 1. 72, 'sleppe'=slip, 'slepe'=sleep, were 16th cent. spellings (v. N.E.D.).

345. more hair than wit a proverbial expression. The whole speech is a parody of 'This gallant of more wit than wealth, and yet of more wealth than wisdom' (Euphues, p. 1).

3. 2.

3-5. Since his exile etc. 'From this it might be supposed that some time—days—had passed since Valentine's departure; but it is not so,' since from ll. 11-13 'it is evident that but an hour or two at the utmost can have elapsed' (Daniel, p. 122). We attribute the discrepancy to abridgment.

7. hour's dissyllable.

13. broken line.

24-5. broken line, with extra-metrical 'and' in following line, suggests adaptation.

46. You have prevailed Proteus' consent, after ll. 39-41, is somewhat suddenly given; possibly the Duke's argument was longer in the original.

49. weed We suggest wend, i.e. to make to wind. Possibly mistaken for 'wead' (a minim-misprint, v. T.I. p. xli). Thurio continues the metaphor.

71. Ay Either actor's gag, or relic of a 'cut.'

77. such integrity 'Such' is left in mid-air, while 'Orpheus' lute' is irrelevant as the passage stands. It is possible to defend this as a violent aposiopesis, but in a text like the present a 'cut' provides the best explanation. Malone writes 'I suspect that a line following this has been lost' Cf p. 79

91. Let us etc. Halting rhythm suggests adaptation.

95. broken line.

4. 1.

This is the first of the forest scenes, which were certainly longer and probably more numerous in the original version, since nowhere else is the adapter's knife busier or more evident. Note (i) the irrational mingling of verse and prose in the present scene; (ii) the poor quality of much of the 'verse'; e.g. ll. 5, 40, 73.

3. about ye We fancy that the form 'ye' may have been a favourite of the adapter. Bartlett gives more instances of its use in this text than in any other.

10. he's (Capell) F. 'he is'

21. sixteen months 'The sixteen months is not wanted for the plot of the play' (Daniel, p. 122); but they may have been needed in the original version

27. I killed a man The abridged text gives no reason for Valentine's falsehood.

34-5. This is surely too poor to be Shakespeare.

35. often had been (F3) F. 'often had beene often'

49 near allied (Theobald) F. 'Neece, alide' A minim-error; 'neere' taken for 'neece.' The converse mistake is found in John 2. 1. 424

55-8. And partly much want The absence of a finite verb in this sentence may be accounted for by a 'cut.'

56. shape, F. 'fhape;'

64. consórt Note that this word is 'cónsort' at 3. 2 84.

74. crew F. 'Crewes'; compositor's grammar.

4. 2.

• There is no change of place in this and the two following scenes, and we have, therefore, treated them as one scene, which indeed is how they must have been played according to the received text. Such continuity of treatment, however, involves difficulties of time, as we shall note below, and it seems likely that at least one scene, i.e. between 4. 3 and 4. 4, has been lost.

Daniel notes that while at first sight 4. 2 appears to take place on the same day as 3. 2 in which Thurio announces his intention to serenade Silvia, this cannot be so, because (i) the duke first gives Proteus permission to have access to Silvia in 3. 2., while the opening words of 4. 2. show that he has been visiting her for some time, days at least; (ii) since 2. 7. stands between two scenes both occurring on the day of Valentine's banishment, Julia must have set out from Verona on that day, and it is impossible that she could have arrived the same night at Milan. Adaptation explains all these anomalies.

1-2 These two lines appear to be not only completely different in quality from those which follow, but hardly to be described as verse at all.

25. tune, F. 'tune:'

26. Now, my young guest etc. The Host-Julia parts of this scene, like the outlaw-scenes, have evidently been greatly adapted. Note: (i) the mixture of verse and prose; e.g. ll. 26-7, 54, 70-1, 135-6 are lines of verse, and so printed in the F. (ii) the F. prints some of the prose as lines or half-lines of verse, which suggests that the copy from which the 'parts' were derived had been revised.

allicholy Mistress Quickly makes the same mistake, M.W.W. 1. 4. 148.

59-60. F. divides 'Not fo; but yet/So false that he grieves my very heart-ftrings.'

83, 86. broken lines.

91. man! F. 'man:'

108. Valentine is dead. Daniel notes that this lie would lack even the merit of plausibility if the scene took place on the same day as Valentine's banishment.

109. his grave (F2) F. 'her graue'

114. broken line.

117. hanging in your chamber Proteus' knowledge of the picture suggests that he has had access to Silvia's chamber before this scene. But cf. note 2. 4. 207.

4. 3.

4. Madam, madam! The repetition ruins the line of verse, but may be explained as actor's gag or careless copying of the 'part.'

13. The actor or adapter appears to have added 'wise'; without it the line runs well.

17. abhors (Hanmer) F. 'abhor'd'

23 Mantua cf. 5. 2. 47. But 'Mantua' may be part of the general topographical confusion of the text.

43-4. At Friar Patrick's cell etc These words appear to be borrowed from 5. 2. 41-2 or vice versa.

45-6. Note that the scene suddenly drops into prose.

4 4.

It is clear from 'That's her chamber' (l. 84) that we are still at the foot of Silvia's tower, as in 4. 3. But, while Eglamour departs at dawn, Launce does not come on until the Duke has at least begun his dinner, i.e. after noon, the Elizabethan dining-hour. We may, therefore, feel tolerably certain that a scene has been cut out between 4. 3. and 4. 4., perhaps one dealing with Valentine's life with the outlaws.

17 the duke's table cf. note 1. 3. 27 Yet this speech must be Shakespearian. Possibly 'duke' was intended as a comic error on Launce's part, like 'Prodigious son.' If so, this may explain how 'duke' got into the 'plot' material.

33 Madam Silvia Warburton read 'Madam Julia,' with some plausibility, since at any rate on the occasion of which Launce has just been speaking 'the fellow that whips the dogs' allowed him no opportunity for taking formal leave of Silvia.

40. I will do (Malone) F. 'ile doe'

42 two days Yet, as the text stands, the impression (which is everything in the theatre) we gather is that Proteus arrived in Milan only one day before these words were uttered. v. head-note to 4. 2

45. Jewel We retain the F. capital, which perhaps denotes the dog's name.

52-5. Ay sir, the other squirrel etc. Arranged as four verse-lines in F., cf. note 1. 1. 133-37.

53. hangman boys (Singer) F. 'Hangmans boyes' F2 reads 'Hangmans boy' v. G.

67. know thou (F2) F. 'know thee' The abruptness of this line is suspicious.

71. nor love (Johnson) F. 'not leave' F2 reads 'to leaue' which most edd. follow. But Johnson's reading makes better sense, and 'loue' might easily be confused with 'leue'; cf. note 1. 1. 65.

73-6. Alas!...thou pity her? Mod. edd. arrange these lines as 'verse'; but 'I cannot choose but pity her' is printed as prose in F. and the dialogue is probably a prose patch due to abridgment.

84. That's her chamber This abrupt parenthesis, which alone marks the place where the dialogue occurs, is we fancy an addition by the adapter. The foregoing line halts badly, and the original may have read

.. give her that ring,
And therewithal this letter: Tell my lady

105. S.D. Silvia comes from the postern. The received text necessitates an entry here for Silvia; yet the following dialogue clearly should take place in Silvia's chamber, since at l. 115 she bids Ursula fetch the picture and without a pause hands it to Julia. Such a sudden change of scene is of course possible on the Elizabethan stage, but there is a strong probability that it was here due not to Shakespeare but to the adapter who ran two scenes into one in order to save lines. The prose at ll 111-115 and the broken lines at ll. 125, 136-7, 140, 146, 155 support this.

147-8 than she is;/...loved her well, F. 'then she is,/...lou'd her well;' transposing the terminal pointing. Cf. Tempest note 2. 1. 165-6.

165. Madam, 'twas Ariadne The abrupt 'Madam' suggests tampering.

5. 1.

One suspects abridgment in this very short scene, but there are no obvious indications of it.

5. 2.

Note that this scene falls into two parts: (i) ll. 1-30, before the Duke's entry, in which the dialogue is a mixture of verse and prose; (ii) the remainder—all verse. The prose is perhaps abridged verse.

5. too little Proteus is quibbling upon 'leg'; but his meaning is obscure, perhaps because the jest is abridged.

7. Julia (Boswell) These asides (cf. ll. 13, 18, 21, 24, 28) all clearly belong to one character, and F. gives them to Julia, except this one, which it assigns to Proteus, and ll. 13-14 which it assigns to Thurio. In stringing together players' parts the name-indicators would be peculiarly liable to confusion in rapid dialogue like this

9. fair i.e. Thurio is 'fair-faced' = a specious deceiver.

13. pearls v. G.

20. she makes no doubt of that i.e. she knows all about that.

26. pities them v. G 'possessions'

32. saw Sir Eglamour (F2) F. 'saw Eglamoure'

34. Why then F. prints as separate line

5 3.

Another outlaw-scene, clearly abridged, cf. Introd. p. xvi. Note: (i) the mixture of prose and verse; (ii) the cowardice of Eglamour (v pp xvi-xvii); (iii) the opening speech in F. 'Come, come be patient;/We must bring you to our Captaine,' which looks like a makeshift introduction (cf. 2. 2.), borrowed from l. 12 below, previous matter dealing with the capture of Silvia having been deleted.

7. Moses F. 'Moyfes'—a 16th cent. form, used by Tyndale. Perhaps the original text had more to tell us of 'Moses and Valerius.'

5. 4.

This scene, a 'damned spot,' as it stands, upon Shakespeare's dramatic reputation, has long been suspected of serious corruption. Cf Introd pp xiii-xix. After the foregoing analysis of the text as a whole, the reader will, we hope, be prepared to agree that the matter has passed beyond conjecture into certainty. Distinct scenes in Shakespeare's original, we believe, went to the manufacture of this, the adapter's masterpiece. Dramatically and metrically it falls into three sections: (i) Valentine's soliloquy, followed by Proteus' attempted violence upon Silvia which is interrupted by Valentine. All this, though not free from 'cuts,' is in the simple end-stopped verse which we associate with the youthful Shakespeare. (ii) The repentance of Proteus, Valentine's strange surrender of Silvia, and the incident of Julia's swoon and the ring. This section is in quite another style, marked by enjambment, strong medial pauses and—strange combination!—a riot of rhymed couplets, mingled with scraps of prose, in one of which (v. note 1 89) we find a fossil line of blank-verse. Further it contains passages which approach perilously near to nonsense, e.g. ll 71-2, 107-10, 113-16. From the remarkable silence of Silvia, while events so vital to her happiness were proceeding (v. p. xviii), we may suppose that the adapter was here availing himself of hints from a Shakespearian scene between Valentine, Proteus and Julia, at which Silvia was not present. But, if so, they were hints only, for we can hardly doubt that the section as it has reached us is virtually his own composition. (iii) In the third section, which begins with the entry of the Duke and Thurio, we return to the style of the young Shakespeare. This section may have been taken from a later portion of the scene which commenced in section (i). On the other hand, it may have been located in Verona (v. note 1. 130). We cannot tell. One of the minor problems of the scene s the fate of Speed, who was captured with Valentine in 4. 1. but does not appear here, v. p. 81.

2. This shadowy desert etc. Collier suggested 'These shadowy, desert,' etc. which is probably right.

47-9. For whose dear sake etc. Clearly corrupt. Daniel proposed 'discandied' for 'descended' and a full-stop after 'perjury.' Possibly 'rend thy' should be read 'candy' likewise.

58. force ye The repetition in l 59, the use of 'ye' (v. note 4. 1. 3), and the metre—all point to the adapter as author of this line.

62-121. This forms the middle, and most corrupt, section of the scene. Note that it would just about take up one side of a foolscap sheet.

67. trusted, when one's own right hand (Johnson) F. 'trusted, when one's right hand' F2 'trusted now, when one's right hand,' which most edd. follow, despite the echo of 'now' in l 65. The passage is strong enough for Shakespeare, and the error perhaps originated through careless copying by the adapter.

71-2. The private wound etc. Many attempts have been made to mend the metre of these lines. The sense needs mending also.

73. short line. Note 'confounds' for 'confound'

84-98 O me, unhappy etc. We print this medley of verse-scrap and adapter's prose as it stands in the F. It is idle to try and bring order into it.

87. Why wag! Curious language for Valentine who had never seen 'Sebastian' before.

89-90. which, out of my neglect, was never done A line of verse, embedded in a prose speech! The adapter is caught—in the act. Cf p. 80

107-10. if shame live. .minds Verse and sense leave little doubt as to the authorship of these lines.

113-16 makes him run .constant eye Also patently adapter's composition, cf. Introd p. xvii. Note that 'all th'sins' is not Shakespearian. Shakespeare never contracts the definite article before a consonant, except when it is preceded by a preposition, e.g. by th', i'th', o'th', etc.

123. Forbear etc. This long line also may be given to the adapter, with little hesitation, as part of the stitch-work between sections (ii) and (iii). Note that it is the only line of 'verse' in the text in which the word 'duke' appears; cf. note 1. 3. 27

126. Silvia's mine The jingle 'Valentine'—'mine' is strongly suggestive of the adapter with his passion for couplets.

130. Verona shall not hold thee v. note 2. 5. 1; but this dialogue may have taken place in Verona in the original. Theobald suggests 'Milan shall not behold thee'; possibly 'hold' = 'hold'

144. repeal thee home This also is curious. Milan was not Valentine's 'home.'

145. Plead a new state v. G. 'state.'

157. reforméd, civil, full of good This description agrees with 4. 1. 71-3 and 5. 3. 13-14, but certainly not with 5. 4. 15-17, 20-1.

THE STAGE-HISTORY OF THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

The Two Gentlemen of Verona has not been a favourite in the theatre. Meres mentions it in Palladis Tamia (1598); but the earliest performance of which record remains is that presented by Garrick at Drury Lane on December 22, 1762; and this, according to Genest, was the first time the play had been given in that theatre. Garrick acted no character in the play, and the production was not Shakespeare's play, but a clumsy alteration of it by Benjamin Victor, Treasurer of Drury Lane Theatre, who made confusion of the plot by altering the arrangement of certain scenes, and wrote additional matter for the last act in order to bring the comic characters, Launce and Speed, on the stage again. The sixth repetition of this play, on January 25, 1763, saw the outbreak of the 'Half-Price Riots.' On this and the following evening Drury Lane Theatre was wrecked by a gang headed by 'Thady' Fitzpatrick; and John Moody, who was acting the Host, only saved the scenery from being set on fire by dragging the incendiary forcibly away. The first recorded performance of the play at Covent Garden took place on April 13, 1784; the production appears to have been Shakespeare's play, with some slight alterations, and three representations of Shakespeare's play were given by John Philip Kemble at Drury Lane in January, 1790. On April 21, 1808, however, Kemble, at Covent Garden, fell back on Victor's version, of which he retained some of the worst features, and added to it some lines of his own composition. In this production Kemble himself played Valentine. The production was not liked and was given only three times. The stage fortunes of the play reached their low-water mark when Charles Kemble had it 'degraded' by Frederic Reynolds into a spectacular opera, the music being produced at Covent Garden on November 29, 1821. At the third performance, when a 'Palace of the Hours, and the Temple of Apollo' were introduced for the first time, various mishaps with the elaborate scenery filled the evening with hearty mirth; but the spectacle survived this trial and was given twenty-nine times. There is mention of a performance of Shakespeare's play at Bath on March 23, 1822. Macready gave the play, according to the received text, at Drury Lane on December 29, 1841; Charles Kean in England and America in the eighteen-forties, and Samuel Phelps at Sadler's Wells in the eighteen-fifties. Of recent years the only productions have been that by Osmund Tearle at the Shakespeare Festival, Stratford-upon-Avon, in 1890, by Augustin Daly (with Ada Rehan as Julia) in New York and London in 1895, and by J. H. Leigh at the Court Theatre, London, in April 1904, with Acton Bond as Valentine.

HAROLD CHILD

GLOSSARY

Note Where a pun or quibble is intended the meanings are distinguished as (a), (b), etc.

- AGOOD, in good earnest ; 4 4. 163
 AIMED AT, guessed at, hinted at,
 3 1 45
 ALE, 'go to the ale with a Christian.'
 A reference to 'Church-ale,' a parish festival, 2 5 49
 ALLICHOLY, i.e. melancholy, 4.
 2. 26
 ALONE, peerless, 2. 4. 165
 AN-END, perpetually, 4. 4 59 APPARENT, obvious, evident (i.e. almost the opposite of the modern meaning, v Shak Eng
 11. 563), 3 1. 116
 AWFUL, i.e. commanding respect,
 4. 1. 46
 BEADSMAN, one who tells beads, or prays, for another, 1. 1 18
 BEAR WITH YOU, (a) endure, (b) maintain, support, v. letter, 1.
 1. 117-18
 BID THE BASE, v. note, 1. 2. 97
 BOOTS, 'give me not the boots,' i.e.
 don't make game of me, 1 1 27
 BOTTOM, a bottom was the core of the skein upon which the wool was wound, 3. 2 53
 BROKER, pander, go-between, 1. 2.
 42
 CHANGE, modulation, 4. 2. 66
 CIRCUMSTANCE, (a) evidence, argument, (b) condition, 1. 1. 36,
 37, 82
 CODPIECE (to stick pins on), part of male attire made indelicately conspicuous in Shakespeare's time, 2. 7 56. Cf. Jack of Newbury 'a great cod peece, whereon he stuck his pins' (Deloney's Works, Oxford, p. 27)
 COLD (for catching), i.e. 'lest they should catch cold' with a quibble upon 'colled' or 'culled' = embraced, 1 2 136
 COMMENDATIONS, remembrances ;
 1 3 53
 COMPETITOR, partner, confederate ;
 2. 6. 35 Cf. 'the rivals of my watch' Ham 1 1 13
 CONCEITLESS, dull, lacking in imagination, 4. 2. 92 CONSORT, company (generally of musicians), 3 2. 84, 4. 1. 64
 CURST, i.e. a shrew, 3 1. 335
 DESCANT, v. note 1. 2. 80-97 ; 1.
 2. 94
 DIRECTION-GIVER, one who directs an archer's aim, cf. gave aim to ;
 3 2 90
 DISCIPLINE, instruction, 3 2. 88
 DOG, 'to be a dog at' = to be expert, 4. 4. 12
 DRIFT, plot, intention, 2. 6. 43 ;
 3 1 18, 4 2 79
 DUCAT, i.e. about 3/6, v. note ;
 1 1. 134
 DUMP, plaintive melody or song
 (v. Sh. Eng. 11. 442), 3. 2. 85
 EARNEST, money paid as an instalment (quibble), 2. 1 150
 ENDING ANTHEM, requiem, 3. 1.
 240

EVE'S LEGACY, v. proud, 3. 1. 331
 EXCEPT, (a) find fault with, (b) leave out of account, 1. 3. 83;
 5. 2. 3

EXHIBITION, maintenance allowance, 1. 3. 69

EYE (be in), i.e. be within range of, 1. 3. 32

FAIR, v. note; 5 2 9

FISH, 'as whole as a fish'; 2. 5. 17. 'Fish-whole' (v. N.E.D.) = 'thoroughly sound and healthy,' but Launce probably intends an indelicate reference as well, cf. 'fish-monger' Ham. 2. 2. 174

GAVE AIM TO, i.e. acted as 'direction-giver' (q.v.). Here the archer, of course, treacherously shoots at the 'giver' instead of the target, 5 4. 102 Halliwell quotes Webster, White Devil, 3. 1. 25, 'I am at the mark, sir. I'll give aim to you, / And tell you how near you shoot.'

GIVER, i.e. 'direction-giver' (q.v.), 2. 4. 34

GOSSIPS, i.e. female friends invited to be present at a birth (N.E.D.), or god-parents for a child (here illegitimate), 3. 1. 268

HAMMER, i.e. in the brain, 1. 3. 18

HANGMAN BOYS, i.e. scoundrelly boys fit for the hangman, 4. 4. 53

HARD-FAVOUR'D, ugly, 2. 1. 46

IMPOSE, injunction; 4. 3. 8

INFLUENCE, i.e. of a star, in the astrological sense, 3 1. 183

INLY, i.e. intimate, heartfelt; 2. 7. 18

INTERPRET, to expound the meaning of a puppet-show, 2. 1. 91

JADE, vicious or ill-conditioned mare or woman; 3. 1. 274

KILL, i.e. subdue; 1. 2. 69

KNIT, with a quibble upon 'knit' meaning 'conceive' (v. N.E.D. 'knit' 4 d.), 3. 1. 302

LACED MUTTON, cant term for a courtesan, 'laced' possibly refers to a slashed bodice, with a pun on 'lace' i.e. to make incisions on the breast of a bird before cooking (v. N.E.D.), 1. 1. 95

LEASE (out by), (a) let out to others, (b) = leash (16th cent. spelling 'leasse')—so 'out of control,' v. possessions, 5 2. 29

LETTER (very orderly), possibly with a quibble upon 'letter' = one who lets rooms, i.e. a landlady. If so, 'very orderly' may be a reference to an advertisement posted in the window of such apartments. Cf. 'bear with you', 1 1. 119

LIBERAL, i.e. loose in her talk; 3. 1. 340

LUMPISH, low-spirited, 3. 2. 62

MANAGE, wield, 3. 1. 247

MEAN, v. note 1. 2. 80-97, 1. 2. 95

MEROPS' SON, Phaethon was the son of Phoebus and Clymene, wife of Merops. The Duke, in contempt of Valentine's birth, refuses to call him the son of Phoebus. Possibly a pun on 'ropes' (i.e. the ladder of cord) may be intended also; 3. 1. 153
 MILK, Launce takes 'milk' in the sense of 'entice by wiles.' Cf.

- Fletcher Rule a Wife, 2. 4.
 'All this is but seeming to milk
 the lover on' (N.E.D.), 3. 1. 295
- MONTH'S MIND, i.e. a strong inclination (orig. a mass said a month after the death of a person); 1. 2. 137
- MOTION, puppet-show, 2. 1. 90
- NAMELESS, inexpressible, 3. 1. 311
- NICE, i.e. as we should say 'particular', 3. 1. 82
- NICK (out of all), i.e. beyond all computation; 4. 2. 73
- NODDY, simpleton, or (adj.) foolish;
 1. 1. 110, 113, 120
- NOTE, v. note, 1. 2. 80-97
- ORDERLY, v. letter, 1. 1. 119
- OVER-SHOES, OVER-BOOTS, phrases
 'expressing reckless continuance in a course already begun'
 (N.E.D.), derived of course from wading through water or mire. Leander was 'over-shoes' in the Hellespont, Proteus was
 'over-boots' in the mire of love.
 Cf. Rom. 1. 4. 41 'the mire of this sir-reverence love'; 1. 1.
 24, 25
- OWE, own, 5. 2. 28
- PEARLS, cataracts, 5. 2. 13
- PINFOLD, pound for stray cattle,
 1. 1. 105
- PLEAD A NEW STATE, v. state, 5. 4.
 145
- POSSESSIONS, with a quibble on
 'possession' by a spirit; 5. 2.
 25
- POST, (a) stock, (b) courier, messenger, 1. 1. 149
- PRaise, appraise, i.e. sip; 3. 1. 337
- PRETENCE, intention; 3. 1. 47
- PRETENDED, v. pretence, 2. 6. 37
- PRINCIPALITY, a spiritual being of a high rank; 2. 4. 150
- PRINT (in), precisely, 2. 1. 161
- PRODIGIOUS, mistake for 'Prodigal';
 2. 3. 3
- PROPORTION, mistake for 'portion';
 2. 3. 3
- PROUD, Launce takes 'proud' in the sense of 'hot-blooded,' 'las-civious.' Cf. Lucrece, 712 'The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with grace', 3. 1. 330
- PUDDINGS, guts of an animal; 4.
 4. 29
- QUAINTLY, cunningly; 2. 1. 117,
 3. 1. 117
- QUIFS, retorts; 4. 2. 12
- QUOTE, observe, note—with a quibble on 'coat,' 'quote' being pronounced and often spelt as
 'cote', 2. 4. 18, 19
- RECORD, sing, warble; 5. 4. 6
- RELISH, sing, warble, 2. 1. 19
- REPEAL, recall from exile, 3. 1.
 234, 5. 4. 144
- ROAD, roadstead, 1. 1. 53; 2. 4.
 185
- ST NICHOLAS, the patron saint of scholars, 3. 1. 293
- SALT, with a quibble upon 'salt' meaning 'wit', 3. 1. 353
- SEARCH, probe a wound as with a surgeon's knife, 1. 2. 116
- SERVANT, one devoted to the service of a lady, who was not pledged by accepting it; 2. 1.
 96; 2. 4. 1, 103-5
- SET, i.e. set to music, v. note, 1.
 2. 80-97
- SET, i.e. 'put down,' with an in-delicate allusion (cf. 2. 5. 19-20); 2. 1. 81

- SET THE WORLD ON WHEELS, 'to let things slide, enjoy myself' (cf. Ant. and Cleop. 2. 7. 96-8), 3. 1. 309
- SHOT, tavern-reckoning, 2. 5. 5, 7
- SILLY, helpless, 4. 1. 72
- SINews, nerves; 3. 2. 78
- SLOW, heavy; 4. 2. 63
- So-Ho, v. note; 3. 1. 192
- SORT, select; 3. 2. 92
- STATE, 'plead a new state,' a term of rhetoric. State = 'the point in question or debate between contending parties, as it emerges from their pleadings' (N E D 'state' 12); 5. 4. 145
- STOCK (with a wench), dowry, 3. 1. 303
- SUN-EXPELLING MASK, 'Much worn by ladies of quality when riding, the eyeholes at times were filled with glass' (Sh Eng. 11. 97), 4. 4. 151
- SWEET MOUTH (she hath a), i.e. she is wanton, lecherous. Launce takes it literally, 3. 1. 321
- SWINGED, thrashed (with a quibble perhaps at 2. 1. 78, cf. M.W.W. 5. 5. 197); 2. 1. 78, 3. 1. 371
- TABLE, tablet for memoranda; 2. 7. 3
- TAKEN UP, scolded, rebuked, 1. 2. 135
- TENDER, have regard for; 4. 4. 138
- TESTERNED, 'tipped' with a tester, i.e. sixpence, 1. 1. 141
- TIMELESS, untimely; 3. 1. 21
- TUNE, v. note, 1. 2. 80-97; 1. 2. 88, 89
- TURN, be inconstant; 2. 2. 4
- UNGARTERED, to go ungartered was a conventional sign of the love-lorn swain, 2. 1. 69
- URINAL, physician's glass for testing the patient's water, 2. 1. 37
- VALENTINE, true-love token, 3. 1. 192, 214
- VICE, 'your old vice still' with a quibble upon 'vice' the iniquity clown of the old moralities; 3. 1. 280
- WASHED AND SCoured, i.e. knocked down and beaten. 'Wash' is a Shakespearian form of 'swash' (cf. Rom. 1. 1. 69) and 'to scour' = to beat (cf. Hen V. 2. 1. 60), 3. 1. 307
- WATER-SPANIEL, 3. 1. 270; for the 'qualities' of this animal cf. 4. 2. 14
- WELL-DERIVED, (a) well-born, (b) i.e. a 'great come-down'; 5. 2. 23
- WELL-FAVoured, (a) gracious (cf. 2. 1. 52), (b) beloved, 2. 1. 47, 50
- WOOD WOMAN, v. note; 2. 3. 27
- YET, this word clearly had some comic significance now lost (cf. Ant. and Cleo. 2. 5. 49, Temp. 2. 1. 40); 2. 1. 110, 115

